

DECISION...

Slurrystore® or earthen pit?

Russell Jones and Vince Neville

Russell Jones has spent a lifetime interested in all aspects of dairy farming (President of the PA Holstein Association 1979-80), so when he and his tenant, Vince Neville, considered a nutrient management system for the farm in Bradford Co., Slurrystore was what they chose.

They looked extensively at earthen pits, but the inability to agitate, as well as excessive rainwater collection and general aesthetics, were not suitable.

Positive containment, general appearance, ease of agitation, and the ability to utilize small amounts of nutrients when needed all contributed to their decision to go Slurrystore.

Special thanks to the Bradford Co. NRCS office for their assistance and cooperation on this project.
