Symposium Focuses On Forages, Feed

LEBANON (Lebanon Co.) — From the start, it's important to sit down with agronomists and nutritionists at the "same table at the same time," according to a world-renowned dairy nutritionist.

Dr. Charlie Sniffen, president of the Miner Institute in New York, was the keynote speaker at the recent Forages and Feeding Symposium II, hosted by Binkley & Hurst Brothers Inc. and Keenan USA at the Lebanon Fairgrounds in Lebanon.

Sniffen brought more than 40 years experience in dairy science and nutrition studies to his presentation, "Making the Most of Farm Forages." The key: grow forages best suited to the farm and individual dairy production needs.

Last year's symposium focused on forage handling from field to feedbunk, according to Don Hoover, Binkley & Hurst Brothers Inc. representative. The second symposium brought together, through a cooperative effort, 19 machinery dealers and about 250 producers and other agri-industry representatives.

Four speakers focused on producing quality forages. They included Corwin Holtz, director of technical support for CPG Nutrients; Dr. Gabriella Varga, distinguished professor of animal science, Penn State; and Dr. Jeffrey D. Brose, DVM, technical service specialist, Monsanto.

The symposium theme was chosen because producers sometimes don't do a "real super job of forage handling," Hooper noted. This year, the focus has been on rationmaking and quality forage production and handling.
