

Dear Henbit & Chickweed,

*The stuff that gets wild garlic
Gets you, too, they now confirm.
That's just as good as catching
Three fish with just one worm!*

Outta my wheat, weeds!

the state, he took the oath of office at the beginning of the ceremony. Normally, a new governor is sworn in after the inaugural address.

"I stand before you as governor of what could be the greatest state in the nation," Rendell said at the beginning of his address.

The 12-minute speech primarily focused on the challenges facing Pennsylvania's government, economy, and education system. He did not specifically mention agriculture or, for that matter, any other of Pennsylvania's production industries.

"First and foremost, we face a state budget deficit that looms as one of the worst in the modern history of Pennsylvania, one that could reach $2 billion or more for the next fiscal year. Make no mistake. Our current state fiscal situation is a crisis — a crisis that threatens all of us, Republicans and Democrats alike, urban and rural, east and west.

"We've tried valiantly to fix the problem in recent years... but the days of short-term fixes are over. The economy has not recovered, and the time has come to pay the piper. And paying the piper will mean short-term pain which, if we are willing to endure, will surely lead to long-term gain."

Rendell said his first priority will be finding a way to "make government live within its means." This, he said, will in-

About 9,500 were in attendance at the Gov. Ed Rendell Inaugural Ball in the new Equine Arena at the Farm Show Complex in Harrisburg. The Tuesday evening event included 9,500 supporters at the "Taste of Pennsylvania" buffet who sampled food from 70 restaurateurs and companies from throughout the state. In a video shown to the thousands of Rendell supporters, Farm Show Director Dennis Grumbine noted how the arena, which housed horse and other animal events throughout Farm Show Week, was transformed in a matter of days from "bulls to a ballroom."
