Anita Gold Recounts Legend Of Blue Willow

My great aunt left us (my sister and I) several boxes of china in the Blue Willow pattern. Can you tell us anything about such pieces in this pattern, and how we can find out their value?

Vivian Carson, Decatur, Ill.

The willow pattern is one of the most popular and beloved decorative designs ever to grace table-scape. It pictures a Chinese landscape with exotic gardens, pagodas, a pair of mystical birds, and three quaint figures on an oriental bridge swept over a waterway. A wind-swept willow tree, among other fruit-laden trees, and a Chinese gondolier poling a boat may complete the picture, although the English pottery houses that produced the willow pattern showed variations in the design.

The earlier pieces can be recognized by the figures on the bridge, and an inner decorative border as well as an outer one on the plates. Later 19th century examples usually show no figures, and the plates do not have the inner border. Then too, the early china was always teal, then the later ware, and the design was always blue. Later examples were produced in other colors as well.

The design was put on the china by a process called "transfer printing," with the pattern first being deeply engraved on a copper plate, then with the aid of metallic inks, were ground in oil and printed on strong tissue. This tissue, in turn, was applied to the earthenware in a wet state, thus transferring the decoration to the china. If you look closely at the borders on these old plates and platters, you often can see where the pattern was cut off by the impression of the inked tissues in sections on the china, which adds to its charm. However, aside from its beauty, the most charming thing about the Blue Willow pattern is its bittersweet legend, transferred below.

The Legend of the Blue Willow

Once upon a time there was a rich mandarin who lived in a large, splendid house with his only daughter, Koong-se. One day the mandarin decided to retire from business, so he brought his secretary, Chang, to his home to put his accounts in order.

Upon meeting, Chang and Koong-se fell hopelessly in love. This angered the mandarin, and the couple was forced to meet in secret, with the help of Koong-se's maid. When the mandarin learned of their rendezvous, he built a high wall of
