OARDC Dedicates Ohio Historical Marker

WOOSTER, Ohio. — The Ohio Agricultural Research and Development Center (OARDC) celebrated its past and looked to the future as it dedicated an Ohio Historical Marker recently during the BioHio open house in Wooster.

The marker commemorates the center's founding in 1882 as the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, a milestone chosen by the Ohio Bicentennial Commission as one of the top 10 agricultural events in Ohio's history.

The brown-and-golden sign, double sided and of cast aluminum, will be located near the Nault Pavilion on OARDC's Wooster campus. An identical one will be erected on Ohio State's Columbus campus. OARDC is the research arm of the university's College of Food, Agricultural, and Environmental Sciences.

The statewide marker program, administered by the Ohio Historical Society, aims to honor local history and teach Ohioans about their state.

"We've had not only a proud past, we have a proud future as well," said OARDC Director Steve Slack in his remarks at the ceremony.

Among OARDC's achievements, Slack said, are the world's first crop-dusting tests in 1921; discovering the nature of phytophthora root rot in soybeans and breeding new varieties that resist it; spurring Ohio's tomato industry, now in the top 10 nationally; reviving the state's wine industry, now worth $70 million a year; and caring for and studying the world's longest continuously maintained no-till research plots.

Current and future efforts, he said, include the development of a new, high-protein soybean variety that led to the construction of a new processing plant in Ohio and 300 new jobs in that plant; continuing to aid the state's growing "green industries," which now earn $3 billion a year; and continuing to pioneer better food-safety methods, such as pulsed electric field (PEF) technology, which uses electrical currents to sterilize processed foods and improve their taste and safety.
