Blue Seal Feeds Returns To Farm Show

LONDONDERRY, N.H.— Blue Seal Feeds, Inc. returns to the Pennsylvania Farm Show this year ready to promote its agricultural wares to showgoers.

This multifaceted company has several divisions to meet the agricultural feed needs of animal producers, from the large commercial dairy farms to a person with only a few horses.

This New Hampshire-based feed company serves the entire Northeast and Mid-Atlantic region through their feed plants and independent dealers.

The Blue Seal Farm Show exhibit will feature items "geared for the farmette and small scale farm," said Paul Kempe Jr., regional sales manager.

For Kempe, the reason to exhibit at the Farm Show is obvious. "The Farm Show draws people from all over the state, New Jersey, West Virginia, and New York," he said.

Kempe noted that Blue Seal's Farm Show experience has been a fairly positive one generating business for their independent feed dealer network, locally in Lancaster County as well as other areas of the state.

"(After the show,) the response was even felt in the Hagerstown (feed) plant," said Kempe.

Blue Seal carries a feed line for sheep, goat, dairy, beef, swine, poultry, and other specialty feed lines. Blue Seal is also the leading feed supplier in the horse industry, according to Kempe.
