"Hallowed be thy Name."

BY MISS ELIZA COOK.

List to the dreamy tone that dwells,
In rippling waves or sighing trees,
Go, hearken to the old church bells,
The whistling bird, the whizzing bee,
Interpret right, and ye will find
The "power and glory" they proclaim,
The chiming, creatures, waters, wind,
All publish,—"HALLOWED BE THY NAME!"

The pilgrim journeys till he bleeds
To gain the altar of his sires;
The hermit prays above his beads,
With zeal that never wanes or tires;
But holiest rite, or longest prayer,
That soul can yield or wisdom frame,
What better import can it bear
Than, Father!—"HALLOWED BE THY NAME!"

The savage kneeling to the sun,
To give his thanks or ask a boon;
The rest of the idiot one,
Who laughs to see the clear round moon;
The saint will laugh in Christian love,
The Moslem prostrate at his flame—
All worship, wonder, and adore:
All end in—"HALLOWED BE THY NAME!"

Whatever may be man's faith or creed,
Those precious words comprise it still;
We trace them on the bloomy mead,
We hear them in the flowing rill,
One chorus hails the Great Supreme,
Each varied breathing tells the same;
The strains may differ—but the theme
Is, Father!—"HALLOWED BE THY NAME!"

"Thy Will be Done."

BY MISS ELIZA COOK.

Let the scholar and devotee,
Tell us how to pray aright:
Let the truths of the Gospel shine,
With their precious hallow'd light;
Let the prayer a mother taught,
Is to me a matchless one;
Eloquent and spirit fraught
Are the words—"THY WILL BE DONE."

Though not fairly understood,
Still those words, at evening hour,
Imply some Being great and good,
Of mercy, majesty and power,
Beading low on infant knee,
And making on the setting sun,
I thought that ere his home must be,
To whom I said—"THY WILL BE DONE."

I have searched the sacred page
I have heard him softly speak,
But the lore of saint or sage,
Nothing better can teach,
Pain has wrung my spirit sore,
But my soul the triumph won,
When the anguish that I bore,
Only breathed—"THY WILL BE DONE."

They have served in pressing need,
Have ne'er'd my heart in every task,
And howe'er my breast may bleed,
No other balm of prayer I ask,
When my whitened lips declare,
Life's last sands have almost run,
May the dying breath they bear,
Murmur forth—"THY WILL BE DONE."

THE WIFE'S REVENGE.

A Scene in a Parisian Ball Room.

Two years since, a young, beautiful, and rich lady of Bologna, married the descendant of a family well known to history, and whose illustrious name was all the fortune which the bridegroom possessed; but the generous Bolognese, in the ardor of her attachment, overlooked the poverty of her lover, in the hope and expectation of a proper return of her disinterested love.

For a year all was happiness; but last summer, being on an excursion to Venice, they formed an acquaintance with a family, from Paris. A young widow of that family, very gay, beautiful and fascinating, and possessing a profusion of golden tresses which might have done honor to the head of an Eve or Olympia, attracted the attention of the Marquis Della R.... Her other charms might have failed, but her ringlets were irresistible—a long-tinting the attractions of his young and lovely marchesa, whose rich dark hair would have rivalled with a Capello, a Cornaro, or even a Juliet of the Capulets, he became ensnared by the fair head of the lively Parisian.

After a month, the family, including the gay widow, returned to Paris, and in another "little month," the marquis received a pressing call to Rome upon business of importance; and leaving his lady to return to Milan at leisure, he took post for Paris with all possible expedition, where he had been a fortnight before the neglected marchesa, who had returned home, discovered the singular error in the compass, by which her husband's course to Rome had been diverted, by means of a friendly letter, apprising her that her husband was incessant in attentions to the blondes of beauties, and her constant escort to the Theatre Italien and other places of amusement.

The lady called her brother to her counsels, and they concluded to follow the marquis to Paris without delay. Previous to her departure, the lady was busy in making researches of a singular nature. The troubled times of Italy, during the intestine broils, had furnished traditions and memories of melancholy catastrophes by steel and poison, and not a few were the modes by which sure and sudden death might be inflicted.

It was shown, at Ravenna, in 1846, by the present countess of Boissy, (La Guicciola of Lord Byron), one of those poisonous with blade of crystal, manufactured at the Lagunian island of Murano, in the cavity of which was concealed a subtle poison, and which, upon the blade being broken in the body, became diffused in the blood of the victim and caused sudden death.

In the archives of the family of the jealous lady were notices of a heir-loon, in the form of a ring, concealed in the setting of which was a small gold globe, and in the interior of which was inserted a poison similar in its effects to prussic acid. This could be borne in the mouth without danger, unless crushed by the teeth, and then instant death would follow.

Secure of this valuable jewel, the deserted marchesa arrived at Paris, and was received into the house of her kind friend, who was married to a financier of eminence in the city, and among many circumstances calculated to disturb her, she learned that her husband was, the next Monday, to attend the fair widow to a ball to be given at the house of the former deputy of the Session which, with many other things, was broken up in 1848.

To this ball her friend consented to accompany her, and the hour impatiently expected at length arrived. Robed in black velvet, with rich laces, which set off to advantage her clear complexion, dark eyes and hair, she was superb—she was dazzling. With fire in her eyes, majestic in her deportment, the haughty beauty strode through the room, (the crowd opening as she advanced,) and proceeded to a little salon lighted by lamps among flowers, and at some distance from the orchestra. There she awaited her dreadful rival and her companion, intending to appear suddenly before them, confound the lady, freeze her inconstant husband by a glance, and then to complete the catastrophe.

The pair arrived. Taking her friend by the hand, the marchesa rose, putting into her mouth at the same time the fatal ball. The metal was thin, and at the least compression of the teeth, the deadly fluid would be ejected, and she would fall a corpse before the thunder-stricken pair. Behold this beautiful woman receiving attentions from a smile upon her countenance, and holding in her mouth the subtle poison which was soon to consume her, and yet with an aspect of apparent satisfaction!

The marquis was waiting with his beautiful blonde, restraining her emotion, the marchesa chose a station where, in the turns of the dance, she would have the most favorable position to burst upon them, when a conversation between a neighboring couple attracted her attention.

"Do you see," said a young man, "the Baronne de—! How elegant she is! This evening! How beautiful! How animated! Who is that with whom she is waltzing?"

"An Italian—a Roman, I believe—who they say adores her for her beautiful blonde tresses; satisfied, perhaps, by the dark-haired damsels of the Eternal city."

"The fair tresses of the baronne," said a third one who had joined the other two as the conversation began, "truly, they are very charming; but my sister, who was educated in the same convent with her, says they are false; and if you examine closely the enormous covering, you will perceive it is not a native to the head."

At this moment the breathless dancers halted near the group. The marquis was addressing some words to his partner, which caused his listening wife to think of the ball she had carried in her mouth, while the baroness was re-adjusting her dress, and pressing carefully her hand over the back of her head, as if to assure that all was safe in that quarter.

Suddenly a new thought seemed to possess the injured marchesa—she dropped the poisoned ball from her mouth into her bosom, rushed upon her rival from behind, and seizing her by the hair detached the magnificent mass of ringlets from the canium, and threw it on the floor!
