Both of ese instances were connected with the miserable eten cents-a-day" charge, which cut so conspicuous a figure in 1840. This charge outhed Mr. Buchanan on a point on which he has peculiarly sensitive. It implied that he of August inst. underrated the importance and character of the aboring men of the country. Mr. Clay resorted to a mode of warfare in which he had few competitorshe drew a picture of a portion of the democratic senators visiting Mr. Tyler to congratulate him, Monroe, Wednesday, August 13, at Keyser's and in the foreground he placed Mr. Buchanan as the organ spokesman of the democrats. It was done in inimitable style and in a vein of great pleasantry, but in the course of his remarks he alluded to the "ten-cents" charge. When he closed Mr. Buchanan said he had listened with pleasure to all he had said except his "allusion to the electioneering slang of the late contest on the subject of low wages." "This remark," said Mr. Buchanan, was wholly unworthy of that senator, and he intended to answer it as it deserved. Mr. Clay interposed, sever it as it deserved.
