On an Electioneering Tour,

We announced last week that General W. H.
Koontz, of Somerset, was in town. We learn that the General in company with Hon, J. R.
Elie, has gone to Huntingdon, and that his purpose is to allay the troubled waters in that county, which threaten to strand the little largue he has launched on the ocean of politics, and in which he intends to reach the haven of the Senator-ship. Which side of his repolitical man" he will show in Huntingdon, we know not. We would advise him to wear a vel, or cost of changeable silk, as a sort of index to his political notions.

MRS. CONNINGHAM.

The tricky heroine of the "Burdell tragedy" seems to be drawing about her the mantle of an impenetrable mystification. We had thought that the "bogus baby" which she is charged with having tried to palm off as an heir to the Burdell estate, had placed her in such a "tight place" that she could not possibly wriggle herself out of it. But it seems that there are two sides to the matter, and that there is nothing wanted to make a breach in her case wide enough to let her out, save a few hard oaths, which are easily obtained in some parts of "Gotham." But "murder will out," and if the gallows should be cheated of their due, the old gentleman who is supposed to wear horns Proth'y.
