

AN AGRICULTURAL ODE.

BY WILLIAM C. BRYANT.

Far back in ages The plow with wreaths was crowned, The hands of Kings and Sages Entwined the chaplets round, Till mer of spoil Disdained the toil By which the world was nourished,

And blood and pillage were the soil In which their laurels flourished. Now the world her fault despairs-The guilt that stains her story, And weeps her crimes amid the cares That formed her earliest glory.

The throne shall crumble, The diadem shall wane, The tribes of earth shall humble The pride of those who reign; And war shall lay His pomp away; The same that heroes cherish, The glory earned in deadly fray, Shall tade, decay and perish. But Honor waits o'er all the earth, Through endless generations-The arts that call the harvest forth, And feed the expectant nations.

The Apple-Apples for Cooking.

The two apples generally regarded best for stewing, are the Fall Pippin for autumn, and the Rhode Island Greening for winter. There and sold. Stocks, and sold on Comm lections solicited.
