We take the following from the columns of the Pennsylvanian.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 11th, 1858. 1 stepped into the Supreme Court Room a few days ago, and, to my astonishment, found it crowded with the most distinguished men of the Real Estate, to wit: Capitol, and being curious to know the cause of this unusual gathering of great minds, I soon learned that it was the occasion of Judge Black's debut before this Court in a case of great importance. All seemed anxious to hear how his first forensic effort before the most august legal tribunal in the world, would sustain his high character for talents and learning.

As a Pennsylvanian, I felt an unusual interest in his success, and I must admit that I was restless and uncertain of the result; for, with all my confidence in Judge Black's great mind, I well knew that he had been for years upon the bench, and in the character of Judge I feared he had forgotten the cunning of the advocate, and that the calm deliberation requisite in the arrived at Boston on the 13th, from Constanti- decision of cases, had unfitted him for the nople, has on board nineteen live Angola goats "rough and tumble" of the bar; and I feared Mohair) and three Angola sheep for the United | lest the commerciant of a first appearance before this exalted tribunal might so embarrass him, that his effort would not be worthy the man.

The case was that of the United States vs. Hen-

Slatter, in the Circuit Court of the United States, at New Orleans, for $2,000 on the recognizance of the former to appear to answer for a breach of the neutrality laws, and which recognizance was forfeited by his departure in the books. The defendant claimed title to a large defendant's claim to bring to light the secret machinery employed to perfect this pretended title. With illustrations simple and familiar, yet pertinent and expressive, the whole case was made to assume a new appearance. You could almost see the hand that wrote the spu rious grant faltering in its work of fraud. You looked upon and pitied the poor perjured witness who craved the wrath of Heaven and invoked the terrors of the last great day on his tale of falsehood; he stood before you with the secret witness of his heart laid bare-a revolting spectacle of the degradation of man.

You know that I love Judge Black, but neve before did I feel so proud of him, and never be occasion of his debut in this great case. The deep tones of his manly voice, the coolness and clearness with which he dissected and exposed to view the intricate secrets which hung around the inception of the defendant's title. clothed in the rich drapery of racy, pure old Anglo-Saxon words, combined sentences terse and so powerful, all contributed to heighten the -The late Know-Nothing Clerk of the House man and the occasion, and to win from the
