The clothing of deceased, was also scattered, though the coat, pantaloons and drawers lay together on a pile, and the shirt sleeves were yet within the sleeves of the coat. No vest could be found. A porte monnaie was found upon the clothing, containing the sum of nine dollars and ninety two cents. [When Pensyl left home on the day before his disappearance, he had about twelve dollars with him.] The identity of the remains as those of Charles Pensyl, was established by the papers contained in the porte monnaie and by other indubitable evidence. There was no fracture of the skull, nor could any marks of violence be discovered on the clothing. An inquest was held upon the remains, the result of whose inquiries we publish below:
