THE BLUE AND THE GRAY.

"The women of Columbus, Mississippi, animated by nobler sentiments than are many of their sisters, have shown themselves impartial in their offering made to the memory of the dead. They strewed flowers alike on the graves of the Confederate and of the National soldiers."—New York Tribune.

By the flow of the inland river,

Whence the fleets of iron have fled,

Where the blades of the grave-grass quiver,

Asleep are the ranks of the dead;

Under the sod and the dew,

Waiting the judgment day;

Under the one, the Blue;

Under the other, the Gray.

These in the robes of glory,

Those in the gloom of defeat,

All with the battle-blood gory,

In the dusk of eternity meet;

Under the sod and the dew,

Waiting the judgment day;

Under the laurel, the Blue;

Under the willow, the Gray.

From the silence of sorrowful hours

The solitary moans rise;

Lovingly laden with flowers

Alike for the friend and the foe;

Under the sod and the dew,

Waiting the judgment day;

Under the roses the Blue,

Under the lilies, the Gray.

So with an equal splendor

The morning sun-rays fall,

With a touch, impartially tender,

On the blossoms blooming for all:

Under the sod and the dew,

Brothered with gold, the Blue;

Mellowed with gold, the Gray.

So, when the Summer calleth,

On forest and field of grain

With an equal murmur falleth

The cooling drip of the rain;

Under the sod and the dew,

Waiting the judgment day;

Wet with the rain, the Blue;

Wet with the rain, the Gray.

Sadly, but not with upbraiding,

The generous deed was done;

In the storm of the years that are fading,

No braver battle was won;

Under the sod and the dew,

Waiting the judgment day;

Under the blossoms, the Blue

Under the garlands, the Gray.

No more shall the war-ryer sever,

Or the winding rivers be rent;

They banish our anger forever

When they laud the graves of our dead!

Under the sod and the dew,

Waiting the judgment day;

Love and tears for the Blue,

Tears and love for the Gray.

NOT GOOD ENOUGH FOR HER.

In the days of the good colony of Virginia, the distinction between rich and poor was based upon laws which, like those of the Medes and Persians, altered not. One of the most devoted followers of this code was a wealthy planter, living in what is known as the Northern Neck. He was in all respects a frank, open hearted manly gentleman; but his estimate of his fellow men was founded upon the principles that governed the selection of his horses—blood. Wealth, too, was by no means an unimportant feature with him. He had our human weakness, and like all of us, was influenced more than he believed, by pounds, shillings and pence.

This Mr. G.—had quite a large family, and among them was a daughter whose beauty was the standing toast of the country. She was just eighteen, and budding into lovely womanhood.—Not only was she beautiful in person, but her amiable disposition and many accomplishments made her more than ordinarily attractive, and half the gentlemen of the Northern Neck were already sighing for her love.

There was in the country at this time a young man who was already rising high in the esteem of his neighbors. He came of good family, but was, as yet, a poor young surveyor, who had taught himself his profession, and who had spent much of his time in traveling unknown forests, with nothing but his compass for his guide, and his chain for his companion, locating lands and settling disputed titles. He was a model of manly beauty, and excelled in the varied feats of strength in which the old-time Americans took such pride. He was calm and reserved, and there was about him a dignified sweetness of demeanor that accorded well with his frank independence of character. He was a great favorite with all who knew him, and there was no gathering to which he was not asked.

Mr. G.—seemed especially to like the young man, and it was not long before he insisted that the latter should abandon all ceremony in his visits to him, and come and go when he pleased. The invitation was heartily given, and as promptly accepted. The young man liked the planter, and he found the society of the beautiful Mary G.—a very strong attraction. The result was that he was frequently at the planter's residence; so frequently, indeed, that Mrs. G.—felt called upon to ask her husband if he did not think it wrong to permit him to enjoy such unreserved intercourse with their daughter. The father only laughed at the idea, and said he hoped his daughter knew her position too well to allow anything like love for a poor surveyor to blind her to her duty and to her family.

Nevertheless Mary G.—was not so fully impressed with this conviction of duty as was her father. She found more to admire in the poor surveyor than in all her wealthy and aristocratic suitors, and almost before she knew it, her heart had passed out of her keeping and was given to him. She loved him with all the honesty and devotion of her pure heart; and she would have thought it happy-ness to go out with him into the back woods and share his fatigues and troubles, no matter how much sorrow they might bring to her.

Nor did she love in vain. The young man, whose knowledge of the world was afterwards so great, had not been taught to consider as binding the distinctions which society drew between his position and that of the lady. He knew that in all that makes a man, he was the equal of any one. He believed that, except in wealth, he stood upon a perfect equality with Mary G.—, and he loved her honestly and manfully, and no sooner had he satisfied himself upon the state of his own feelings than he confessed his devotion simply and truthfully, and received from the lady's lips the assurance that she loved him very dearly.

Scorning to occupy a doubtful position, or to cause the lady to conceal afraid from her parents, the young man frankly and manfully asked Mr. G.— for his daughter's hand. Very angry grew the planter as he listened to the audacious proposal. He stormed and swore furiously, and denounced the young man as an ungrateful upstart.

"My daughter has always been accustomed to riding in her own carriage," he said. "Who are you, sir?"

"A gentleman, sir," replied the young man quietly; and he left the house.

The lovers were parted. The lady married soon after a wealthy planter, and the young man went out again into the world to battle with his heart and conquer his unhappy passion. He subdued it; but although he afterwards married a woman whom he loved honestly and truthfully, and was worthy of his love, he was never wholly dead to his first love.

Time passed on, and the young man began to reap the reward of his labors. He had never been to the house of Mr. G.—since his cruel repulse by the planter; but the latter could not forget him, as his name soon became familiar in every Virginia household. Higher and higher he rose every year, until he gained a position from which he could look down upon the proud planter. Wealth came to him, too. When the great struggle for independence dawned, he was in his prime, a happy husband, and one of the most distinguished men in America. The struggle went on, and soon the "poor surveyor" held the highest and proudest position in the land.

When the American army passed in triumph through the streets of Williamsburg, the ancient capital of Virginia, after the surrender of Cornwallis, the officer riding at the head of the column chanced to glance up at one of the balconies which was crowded with ladies. Recognizing one of them he raised his hat and bowed profoundly.—There was a commotion in the balcony, and some one called for water, saying Mrs. Lee had fainted. Turning to a young man who rode near him the officer said gravely—

"Henry, I fear your mother has fainted. You had better leave the column and go to her."

The speaker was George Washington, once the "poor surveyor," but then commander-in-chief of the armies of the United States. The young man was Colonel Henry Lee, the commander of the famous "Light Cavalry Legion"; the lady was his mother, and formerly Miss G.—, the belle of the "Northern Neck."

TRICKS OF A JUGGLER.

The far-famed Robert Heller cannot be satisfied with his legitimate triumphs before an audience, but occasionally does a neat thing for his own amusement, very much to the surprise of those who happen to be present. On Saturday last, while passing an itinerant vender of cheap provisions, Mr. Heller suddenly paused and inquired:
