GRANT WRITES A LETTER AND PROVES HIMSELF ALIAR.

There is no use mincing words about Gen. Grant. The sooner the disguise is stripped from his face the better. The sooner his treacherous character and the purpose of his treachery are exposed, the more easy will be his overthrow. Hence, we shall not hesitate, in speaking of him, to call things by their right names.

At Appomattox, in April, 1865, U. S. Grant accepted the surrender of R. E. Lee, upon the condition that so long as the said Lee and his troops should obey the laws, and conduct themselves as peaceful citizens, they should not be molested in person or property. To this Grant pledged not only his own faith, but the honor of the army and of the Government. A few months afterwards, this same Grant made a tour of the South and reported to the President that the people of the States which had been in rebellion, were well disposed towards the Govto be restored to their former relations with that Government, and ought to be represented in Congress. But to the President treated as a falsehood. should not be molested in person and property. As a mass, those people had faithfully obeyed the laws, nay, in obedience to the suggestion of the President, they had abolished slavery and repudiated their war debt. No complaint was made against them, as a community, for disobedience to the laws .acted such laws as place their persons in the hands of a military despot and subject their property to taxation for the support of governments in which they have no voice. Thus, Grant's terms to Lee and his soldiers were trampled under foot. It was ance occurred outside the church by a natural to expect that Grant would never become a party to his own disgrace, by chiming in with the Radicals forcements of police drove off the riotin repudiating his own pledged word ers and captured the ringleaders. But we anticipate. Confiding in the the President appointed him to a place in his Cabinet. As our readers well know, Edwin M. Stanton was suspended from the War Office, and Grant appointed in his stead. Stanton refused to go out until Grant demanded the office, and, then, Stanton declared that he yielded to superior force. Thus Gen. Grant became one of the President's official advisers, a trusted member of his Cabinet. But the time came when the U.S. Senate, which now asto act upon Stanton's suspension. The President, aware that the Senate, for store Stanton to the War Office, called upon Gen.
