PETROLEUM AS FUEL.-Apparatus PETROLEUM AS FUEL.—Apparatus for generating steam in stationary engines, or those on steamboats or locomotives, by the use of crude petroleum for fuel has been in operation in Washington city for a month, and is at last pronounced a complete success by engineers and machinists. The petroleum is evaporated and burned in the furnace in the form of gas. Perfect safety from accidental fire is claimed. The inventor maintains that with this apparatus he can get up as much steam power with two gallons of petroleum as is usually gotten with a ton of good coal; that is, he can run a locomotive or steamship as far and as fast with one barrel of oil as with fifteen tons of coal, and with much more convenience and safety. The application of the invention to driving the machinery of a foundry in Washington is to be made to day, for the benefit of officers of the same of the same of the same of the same and safety.
