Hayes.

The Philadelphia Times is exceedingly lavish in its praise of Mr. Hayes southern policy. In speaking of the withdrawal of the Federal troops from the state house at New Orleans, it says:

"President Hayes bas now reached the consummation of his grand work, and it is well done. Whether it could have been done more wisely is not material now, and few will venture to question the sagacity and statesmanship which conceived and executed it."

This is rather gushing from a journal that always contended that the President had no right to maintain a bogus state government by Federal bayonets even for a single day. It was the plain duty of Mr. Haves, without question or quibble, that is, assuming him to be the rightful President, to withdraw the troops from the pretenders, Chamberlain and Packard, immediately upon his accession to office. He had not the slightest right to determine which of the two rival claimants to the chief ! executive office of a state, was the Governor of such state. His inviting Hampton and Chamberlain to Washington to confer on the situation; his sending a commission to Louisiana to investigate and report upon the condition of things, are acts entirely unknown to the lawof no legal or binding force whatever. So all the talk of Hayes' recognizing the one or the other of the two state governments-is the merest bosh. He has nothing to 'recognize' in the whole affair, except his own plain and lawful duty, and that was to withdraw the troops. Instead of doing this small towns busy to run one. the first day he held the office of President, as he should have done, he hesitates, parleys and badgers for two long months, but finally does what he could not well help doing. This is what the Times calls 'sagaciousstatesmanship,' "the consummation of a grand work." It is nothing of the kind. There is neither statesmanship nor grandeur about Millheim merchants, have they falit. Mr. Hayes simply makes a virtue len asleep? ----The War in Europe.

The war that was so long brewing between Russia and Turkey, has at last commenced in earnest. The you. first engagement has already been fought at Tchurukson, near Batoum. After some fighting the Russians were defeated and put to rout, with a loss of 800.

At present the conflict is between Russia and Turkey only, but the chances are very strong that some if not all, of the Great Powers will soon be involved, which will make a general European war inevitable. This is the gloom prospect of our fellow men across the waters.
