A Trafic Tale and its Singular

gentleman from Joplin who gave him the starling developments of which we write were brought to light, and upon their strength a divorce was granted. TTO VIAVA JA

In 1863, the lady, then a young and handsome maiden, a resident of Stone county, Southwest Missouri, married a worthy young man to whom she had long been engaged. as both had been reared in the vicinity, and were beloved and respected by all, they received the kindest benisons of all who knew them.

But the war was raging around them, and their locality was alternately occupied by each of the contending armies, A draft was about to be made, and the young husband a month after his marriage, concluded to take advantage of the government's liberal offers and enlist rath er than run the risk of being forced into the ranks without any emolument save the meagre pay of a private. So he voluntarily enlisted and became a private in the ranks of the Union Army.

His courage and intelligence soon gained the respect of his officers and fellow men, and in several hard fonght battles he distinguished him. self to such an extent that his name was forwarded to the Department Meadquarters in St. Louis, and in a short time returned emblazoned

A SECOND LIEUTENANT'S COM-MISSION.

The regiment was then stationed in Northern Arkansas, and at this opportune moment, when he was so near to all he held dear (for a son was born to him during his absence). he could not resist the temptation to obtain a short leave of absence and visit his wife and child.

This, to him high-prized boon, was easily obtained, and with his commission in his pocket, he mounted his horse and started for home. With eager haste he pursued his journey, his mind being filled with bright visions of a happy meeting with his heart's idols. At length the well remembered land marks had taken his place. He did his came to view.

He was close to home. A few hundred yards of the leafy forest, and he would be n the opening where he could see the sm oke

How the bright-eyed baby would-"Halt !" came a fierce order in steatorian tones from the bush that surrounded the road. Ere he could rein his horse in obedience to the dread summons, he was, as if by magic, surrounded by twenty or thirty flerce and heavily armed men. whom his practiced eye told him were the most unrelenting foes that the uniform he wore ever had. His heart sank within him, brave as he was, for he knew there was no mercy in the breast of a bush whacker, for such they were.

A few questions were put to him by the leader of the band, but they were more for form's sake than any. thing else. His uniform was a mate answer for all they wished to know, while from his pockets, which were rapidly turned inside out, the commission was drawn forth, which made them more eager for his blood.

The leader of the band was a man near his own age, and to him he appealed and demanded that he be treated as a prisoner of war. His request was treated with derision, and a moment more his legs were pinioned and an ominous rope with a noose at its end dangled from the and implored them to let him see his wife and child but for a moment before he died. Tenderly and reverently was the soldier-husband laid at rest in his narrow home by these sorrowful women, whose symphathetic grief was his only burial service. But the fairest flowers of the field and forest were gathered by the griefstricken widow and planted on the grave. In the sunny days of summer she would make daily pilgrimages to the lonely grave, and sit with tender memories while her child prattled over the sod beneath which its father was mouldering Ten years passed. And though time had healed the wounds in her heart, the love for him who had been the husband of her youth was still faithful. Her child had become youth, and needed the stern, restraining hand and experienced counsel of a father. She, too, a weak, lone woman, was tired of fighting the battle of life, and yielded to the supplications of a man who bore a good character. They were married, and their lives blended into a happy, even tenor of connubial existence. He treated her kindly and affectionately, was a father to her son, and an honest, industrious bread winner for them all. She loved and respected him, and her future seemed to her full recompense for the weary past.

It was seldom she referred to it. He never. All he knew was that her husband was a soldier, like he bimself and thousands of others had been, and that he was dead, as thousands of others like him were. He duty. He loved his wife; she loved him in return. It was all he aske 1,

The "Powhatan estate" was for wo hundred years the property of the Mayo family, and here, as the story goes, John Howard Payne fel madly in love, when in Richmond with Miss Maria Mayo (afterward Mrs. General Winfield Scott), a famous Richmond belle in her day, and remarkable for her wit and intelligence, as well as for her extraordinary beauty. Poor Payne laid his hear at her feet, but she is said to bave toyed and coquetted with it, boding passed through the mind of and then to have flung it aside. When all hope of winning the fair prize was abandored, l'ayne went to Europe, where he remained for nearly twenty years, and where he wrote his "Home, Sweet Home," which was first sung in his opera of "Clare," at London. This traditional incident in the life of Payne revives another (and one still current in Richmond) connected with first addressed Miss Mayo, he was only a captain in the regular army, and his suit was summarily dismissed. Afterward, when a major, he senewed the proffer of his hand, but with no better success. The third time he wore the epaulets of a general, and these promptly secured his acceptance. When asked by one of her friends why she had thus suddenly changed her mind, Miss Mavo is said to have replied : "In my estimation, there is a very decided difference between a captain, or
