intimated to have secret pledges that he would be with them, aitogether, as soon as the Greenback bubble would have bursted, which they thought would be directly after the election. On this latter idea they were entirely correct. Green-backism is utterly and hopelessly played out. It never did amount to more than a disturbing factor in polities, and will now, like other impracticable and visionary ideas, rapidly varish out of sight. The five or six Greenback congressmen, of whom Mr. Yocum is one, will scon affiliate with one or the other of the great parties and it is a matter purely of conjecture where they will go. Mr. Yocum will most likely go where he so recently came fromto the Republican party. At all events this is what they seem to expect, judging from their utterances and the support they gave him at the election. Democrats in the organization of the House, as well as on other leading questions, basing its hope on the fact that Greenbackers are, if possible, even more opposed to Sherman's ruinous contraction policy, than

But this is not all nor the worst. It is only too well known that the was all the time easting about him, trying how best to secure favor in the eyes of the Greenback leaders themselves while that organization was still strong and believed to hold the balance of power. The scandal created by these over-true rumors nothing affected the position of this true son of his sire.
