

Millheim on the L. C. & S. C. R. R. has a population of 600-700 is a thriving business center, and controls the trade of an average radius of over eight miles. In which the general has a large circulation than all other county papers combined.

BEHIND THE SCENES.

"Such a bargain, aunt Fanny! Lay aside your work and express your admiration. Half a dozen of these pretty linen collars for one dollar. So nicely scooped and stitched; just the thing for the morning are they not?"

"Exactly, Julia. They are a very desirable addition to your bridal wardrobe. But I cannot but regret that they are not higher priced."

"Why, aunt Fanny! You astonish me. I had no idea you were one of those ladies who think nothing is worth having unless it cost an extravagant price."

"And you are much in error if you think so now, Julia. But, in looking at your cheap collars my sympathy is called forth for the poor seamstress, whose weary fingers performed the task which was to procure for her a wretched subsistence."

"O, it is all very true, aunt Fanny; and I am sure I pity the poor as much as any one, but as long as this evil exists I may as well reap the benefit of it. You know that 'it is an ill wind that blows nobody good.'"

Aunt Fanny shook her head gravely as she replied:

"You speak lightly, Julia. May you never have reason to know the suffering which springs from the want of union in the interests of the employer and the employed. But enough of this. Let us speak of your approaching marriage. Tell me when the wedding is to take place, and all about it."

"In two short weeks. I am to be married at my guardian's, of course. You know he does not quite approve of the marriage; or, at least, he would prefer that we wait until Henry is established in business; but I have coaxed him in good humor. You know he might as well submit with a good grace, for I shall be eighteen on my wedding day, and my little property comes into my own hands. So we shall begin life in the style which we intend to keep up. A handsome house, well furnished and in a pleasant part of the city. You shan't your head, but you will see that it will do as well. And now say—will you grant the earnest wish of Henry and myself, and make your future home with us? I shall need an advisor and you shall be my second mother."

"My dear child! your kindness brings the tears to my eyes. But I can't accept your invitation—at least not at present. A few days ago I received an urgent request from an aged relative in England to come to her and be her companion and friend for the remainder of her life. She is wealthy but lonely in her rickles, and being nearly blind, is much dependent upon the kindness of those around her. At present there are none but servants to administer to her wants. She was the sister of my own dear mother, and I feel it to be my duty to go to her and do what I can for her comfort. I sail in the next steamer."

"Before the wedding! Why aunt Fanny, you will not leave us so soon?"

"My prayers will be with you and yours, dear Julia, but it is necessary that I hasten my departure as much as possible. Do not forget your old friend, and in the midst of your happiness, sometimes remember the words of advice which she has so often spoken."

With many tears the young maiden bade adieu to one who, though in reality no relative, had long been a valued friend.

Julia Howard had become an orphan in early childhood. Her father's dying charge placed her under the care of one who, in many respects, was worthy of the trust, and had well performed the duty which devolved upon him.

At seventeen she became attached to Henry Lawrence, a young man of good family and unblemished character.

Her guardian heartily approved the connection, but as Julia stated to aunt Fanny, preferred the young couple should wait until Henry was established in business, but this prudent advice was not followed.

Henry's prospects were good—Julia had a few thousands. Why not begin the world at once?

So on the very day, when by a peculiar coincidence, the bridegroom was twenty-one and the bride eighteen, they stood at the altar and pledged their holy vows which bound them together for weal or for woe.

All was sunshine then. The present was delightful, and the future bore the rainbow tints of hope.

Years passed ere the dark clouds of adversity gathered around them, but alas! they did gather, and the bright sunlight faded away until scarcely one beam found its way to those once happy hearts.

We will pass over the train of misfortunes which had at length reduced the young couple and their two children to poverty and want.

Impudence in their style of living, failure in business, long and severe illness were the producing causes.

Unaccustomed to self-control, or to the denial of selfish gratifications, Julia was ill-prepared to bear this rigid system of economy which was now necessary. She became irritable and morose, and thoughtlessly added many a drop to the bitter cup which her husband was drinking.

"Is there no hope of your obtaining the situation with Mr. Markham, which she mentioned some days ago?" she suddenly asked, as her husband rose from their fragrant meal, one cold morning in the early part of winter.

"None at all," was the reply. "The present clerk has decided to remain. But even my present situation is better than nothing. Three hundred will keep us from starving."

"It were better to die, Henry, than to live in this way. Life has lost all its charms for me, and I would gladly be at rest."

"But our children, Julia. Think of them and keep up your courage a little longer. The day may yet dawn upon us."

"Never, never. My own folly has brought this upon me. My guardian warned me against marrying a not well established in the world, but I sledged his advice. Thank God, he is not here to see how bitterly I repent my rashness."

"And do you really regret it, Julia? We may regret the imprudence in our former style of living, and we may sorrow for the misfortunes which have come upon us, but we need not regret our marriage."

"Was not that the cause of it all? was the bitter reply.

Deeply grieved, the husband turned and left the house.

The day was a sad one—and when an hour or two before the usual time for his return, Henry was born into the house by two men, and the unhappy little family were told that an accidental fall upon the ice had resulted in a broken leg, the last drop seemed to have been added to the already brimming cup.

From the night of agony which followed, Julia was a different, and in some respects a better woman.

Hitherto there had been a lingering feeling of pride which had prevented her from coming forward at her husband's side to struggle against the misfortunes which had come upon them. She had shrunk back despairing and powerless. Now she was roused into energy.

Something must be done, and with the consciousness of what devolved upon her, came an earnest prayer for strength—a looking upward which was not her wont.

Nothing presented itself to her mind but plain sewing, and this, she was well aware would afford them but a miserable pittance. Still it would be better than nothing, and application was at once made to a kind neighbor, and through her influence work was speedily obtained.

Often when her employers would urge her to abate a few pennies on the usual price, and assure her that it was for her interest to work cheap she would sigh deeply as she remembered her feelings in former days, and the truth of aunt Fanny's words forced itself upon her mind. The sufferings proceeding from the want of union in the interests of the employer and the employed were now her own.

And where was aunt Fanny during the lapse of years? Faithfully and unwearily had she performed the duties which she had taken upon herself. That task was now ended. That aged relative, to whose wants she had so long ministered, had at length gone home. Once more aunt Fanny's heart turned to her native land. Friends of her earlier years rose before her, and she longed to meet them again face to face. The few necessary arrangements were soon made, and ere many a week had passed she had once more crossed the broad ocean, and was welcomed with kindly greetings by many whom she had known and loved.

One of her first inquiries was for Julia, for it was very long since she had heard from her.

News of the failure of Mr. Lawrence in business had reached her, and rumors of various undefined misfortunes had from time to time come to her knowledge, but not one word of direct information. The mother of Julia had been a very dear friend, and aunt Fanny felt a yearning tenderness for her child.

So she sought out and called at her home.

That day had been a discouraging one for Julia, even more so than usual.

A little exertion had brought on Henry's fever again, and the physician who was summoned to attend him had spoken in strong terms of the absolute necessity for perfect rest and freedom from excitement.

How was this possible when hour after hour he must lie upon his back, and see his wife toiling beyond her strength for their maintenance? And then it was sometimes difficult to procure work, and Julia absolutely trembled as she thought of the sufferings they must undergo should this means of support be cut off.

Some kind neighbor had advised her to apply at a collar manufactory near by, where many women and young girls found constant employment.

She had done so with success, and at that moment that her old friend entered she was gazing mournfully upon a dozen collars which she had taken upon trial. They were nicely stitched by a sewing machine and she had engaged to bind them and make three button holes in each for the small sum of one cent apiece.

"A startling price," she murmured to herself, and then seemed lost in a sad reverie, from which she was aroused by the soft voice of aunt Fanny.

Julia looked up in surprise, but in an instant her wonder was turned into joy, and twining her arms around aunt Fanny's neck she sobbed like a little child.

Composure was at length restored and then there was so much to tell and to be told that the good lady took off her bonnet and said she should make herself quite at home, and pass the evening with her.

"You can not be at home here," said Julia, "because it is not pretty enough for home."

But to this aunt Fanny answered: "Home is wherever we find those we love, it matters little in what place we find them. So this is my home for the evening, and now, Julia, as your husband needs a little more attention, give me your work and I will sew for you. My trouble is in my pocket as usual. You see I retain my old habits."

"You are still the same dear aunt Fanny," was the reply.

"Here is my work—to bind these collars. Do you remember our conversation the day I purchased those cheap collars? Every word of it is fresh in my mind. I was very thoughtless then—but O, aunt Fanny, I too have now had a peep behind the scenes."

"You have, indeed, my poor child; but now to your husband, and when he is comfortably arranged we will sit together by his bedside and have a quiet chat."

The events of years were soon talked over, and ere aunt Fanny rose to bid them good night, she said:

"And now, my dear young friends I am ready to accept your former invitation and become an inmate of your family."

"O, aunt Fanny," exclaimed Julia, "we have no home to offer you. This is the hardest trial of all."

"Listen, my child. I am becoming infirm, and shall soon need the care which I have bestowed upon others. There are none who seem nearer to me than yourself. My means are ample, for my generous relative has added largely to my little fortune. We will look for a suitable dwelling, and you will be as affectionate children."

Tears were her only answer, but these were sufficient to speak the feelings of the heart.

In after years neither party had cause to regret this arrangement.

Clearer intimacy only served to endear them still more to one another.

In the midst of her happiness, Julia forgot not the use of affliction, and would often feelingly refer to her peep behind the scenes.

"That's it,"—At the remarkable trial, where one young lady is being tried for killing another, Mrs. fediana Dennis was called as a witness. Mr. Crisfield, who was cross-examining for the defense, said he would not press a certain question if she didn't like to answer it. Then, as if to prevent any misunderstanding, the witness took the sudden determination to tell the secret. It was only that Ella had teased her about possibly becoming her aunt through a marriage with Ella's uncle, who was paying her attentions.

Counsel for defense:—"What, madam, and you a married woman?"

Witness (blushing deeply, but speaking in a merry voice):—"Why, sir, I am a widow."

Counsel:—"Oh, crackey, that's it, is it?" and the whole court exploded in a roar of laughter at the counsel's quaint explication of disappointment over finding so empty a mare's nest.

They tell a good story of an old business man who recently found himself cornered financially, and desired to go into bankruptcy. He applied to a lawyer to know how much it would cost to have the papers made out and the business put through. He was told that the expenses would be about $100, and appearing to be satisfied with the price he told the lawyer to go ahead. The lawyer followed the instructions, and when the work was done he called for his little $100. "All right," said the bankrupt, "you can put your claim in with the others."

CHEAP KANSASLANDS

We own and control the Railway lands of TRIGO COUNTY, KANSAS, about equally divided by the Kansas Pacific Railway, which we are selling at an average of $25 per acre on easy terms of payment. Alternative sections of Government lands can be had by individuals by actual settlers.

These lands lie in the GREAT LIMESTONE BELT of Central Kansas, the best winter wheat growing district in the United States, yielding from 20 to 35 bushels per Acre.

The average yearly rainfall in this county is nearly 35 inches PER ANNUM, one-third greater than in the much extolled Arkansas Valley, which has a yearly rainfall of but 24 inches per annum in the same latitude.

Stock-raising and wool growing are very remunerative. The winters are short and mild. Stock will do all the year on grass. Living streams and springs are numerous. Pure water is found in wells from 20 to 30 feet deep. THE HEALTHY CLIMATE is the world's No. 1 never and again there. No muggy or oppressive roasts. Plenty of fine building stone, lime and sand. These lands are being rapidly settled by the best classes of purchasers, having a goodly number of Members of our firm residing in WA-KENNEY, and will show lands at any time. A pamphlet giving full information in regard to soil, climate, water supply, &c., will be sent free on request.
