The captain of a Long Island Sound Steamer was recently seated around the table in his room, and with him half a dozen men sat, smoking and spinning yarns. Many were the stories related that night upon the Sound The conversation finally ten old sea dog, who had spent most of his the serpent in the China Seas. That was | magnetic ointment take lard, raisins cut | moderate oven for about one hour. when he was little more than a boy. Again when he was captain of the ship Georges, a vessel which hailed from New York and was finally condemned in a South American port for unseaworthiness, he ran across the serpent on the Pacific coast. The last time the monster came under his notice was right here in the sound, "and," he said, as he looked at his watch and calculated the steamer's distance from New York, "it must have been at about this " It was in July of last year-so the old sea dog's story ran-and he was taking a New York yacht around to Newport. At noon the sun poured down hot enough almost to open the seams of the deck planks. There was a three-knot breeze blowing and it was dead ahead. He had taken in his 2 oz. of turpentine, 2 oz. hartshorn and your ailments-you will be wise, well topsails-for he didn't believe in topsails a little camphor, for sprains, stiffness, when beating to windward—and was mak- etc. Leaf lard for cuts. Coal oil aping himself as comfortable as possible on the quarter deck. He had a spy-glass in his hand, trying to discover some familiar sail. Suddenly his eye caught a strange movement in the water. It looked, half a mile distant, like a huge bunch of seaweed in motion. The yacht was on the starboard tack and the curious object off the starboard bow. The captain went forward with his glass and looked. As the yacht approached nearer the object he saw that it was alive, and knew from his past experiences that it was a sea serpent. The yacht kept on un-til within a hundred yard of the monster, when the serpent lifted its head for a moment. The head was an immense affair. the size of a barrel. It was shaped something like a horse's. It was visible for only one moment. The serpent blew something like a whale and then settled into the water, only the back being visible. All aboard the yacht were so excited that the little vessel was close abord the monster before they were aware of it. The yacht was thrown into the wind, but too late. She struck the serpent square upon the back, although the shock was not a heavy one. The monster threw its tail out of water, lashed the waves for a moment, throwing the spray high in the air, and then disappeared. The yacht went about on the other tack, and ten minutes later the monster again appeared right alongside, and not twenty feet away. The thing was going at the rate of five knots an hour. The head and shoulders went by, and then came the long, slimy-looking body, as large round as a good-sized log. In a few minutes the monster was out of sight. The men on the yacht calculated that it must have been at least hundred feet long. This was the only time the old sea-dog had ever seen a serpent in Long Island Sound, but that it was a geniune one he had no doubt whatever.

No one else in the captain's room had ever seen the monster.

The captain of the steamer listened for a while to the stories in silence. He puffed his pipe complacently and his eyes twink- and forced onward with gentle pressure until the dough is soft and can be easily from his pipe, hitched his chair around in a lected to form a cylindrical bale of the in lard. way which was as much as to say. The weather desirable; a pressure of 8 cwt. to the one and three-fourths pounds of flour, had been threatening all the afternoon, and square yard may, however, be given if two pounds of fruit, one pint of sweet we were going to have a nasty night of it. We hadn't any more than got through the Gate when the rain came down. It wasn't hard, driving rain, but the fine, misty sort of stuff that generally comes with a fog. The great fog banks rolled in from the sea and shut out the land completely. We went along very slow and blowing our just seemed alive with vessels. First a tug some little fisherman would toot his horn heard the horns and bells make such a fuss before. It was just about midnight, and we had got out of the crowd of vessels. An occasional horn told us that some few were still abroad, however. I was in the pilot-house, peering out of the window into the darkness. Suddenly something white loomed up right in front of us. It was a schooner and she was right in our path. shouted, and the pilots made the wheel spin as it hever had turned before. But it was too late. There was a shock. We struck the schooner amidships and cut her to the water's edge. Two or three men run over the deck, and for an instant I caught sight of a woman. She was dressed in white. The light on the steamer's side shone her. She gave an agonizing scream, the vessel sank and all was over. The whole thing had transpired almost as quick as thought. We swung a boat or two into the water, but the search was in vain. Not that woman's face I shall never forget to my dying day. Occasionally at night when on deck it is pictured vividly to my imagination. It is singular, but it affected the pilot in the same way. Just one year after the accident, at the same hour, the piolot called me to the wheel-house. He was trembling like a leaf. He had seen a phantom vessel. The steamer had struck it in just the same manner, he had seen the same men running over the deck and the woman again appeared with her despairing The captain stopped for a moment and then went on: "I tried to reason with an occasional washing will also encourhim, but it was no nse, and for a week after the occurence he talked of the phantom vessel and its ghostly crew. Well, sir, will von belive it? on the second anniversary of the accident I was called to the wheelhouse in the same way. Again had the pilot had the some experience. On the third year it was repeated and on the fourth year. The piolot could stand it no longer. The phantom seemed to hannt him and he went off the line. I never believed in it much myself," continued the captain, stroking his chin, "but then I never spent the night in the wheel-house, Perhaps I will next time; I can't say. I don't believe in ghosts-well, it's strange, mighty strange.

Afraid of His Wife,

Bishop Beadon, uncle of the late Canon Beadon, was completely governed in all things by his wife, who was one of the most devoted whist-players ever known. After her husband's death she lived in Mayfair, and was famous for her Sunday cardparties. A story still remembered in somerstshire of the answer the Bishop received when he once took one of his clergy to desk for diverting himself at Bath instead of living at his vicarage. "Mr. A., it strikes me that, if you are well enough to sit up half the night playing whist at the rooms, you must be well enough to do duty at your living." "My lord, Mrs. Beadon would tell you that late whist acts as a tonic or restorative to dyspeptic people with weak nerves. The mention of his wife's name at once silenced the prelate.

The best specimens of any strain or style of horses sell rapidly, at good prices, and the poor ones of all breeds are drugs upon the market. DANDELION, is the most important question to-day with suffering millions who, when looking at the long list of useless pile nostrums feel as the afflicted Bible Patriarch, like exclaiming: "I have heard many such things, miserable com-forters are ye all, how long will ye vex my soul and break me in pieces with words?" It is not recorded that Job had piles, but he could not have hear who anything records and the same have had anything more painful, and the same question might have been asked then as since for three thousand years: can piles be cured? We believe that Dr. Silsbee has solved the problem, for nothing is more certain than that his "Anakesis," does absolutely and promptly cure the worst cases of piles. When half a million of afflicted assert positively that it has cured the more discountered in 200 professional transfer of the more discountered them and in 20 years no one has used the doc-tor's wonderful remedy without instant relief, and by following his simple instructions as to habit and diet were, benefitted and over 95 per cent cured, all arguments and theories of those who havn't used them, go for naught. Anakesis is now prescribed by physicians of all schools and has been pronounced as near infallible as is possible. It is easily applied, infallible as is possible. It is easily applied, perfectly safe, instantly relieves pain, and ultimately cures the most inveterate cases. It

ONDORSING DR. RADWAY'S R. R. REMEDIES AFTER USING THEM FOR SETTINGS.

New York, Jan. 4, 1877.

Dear Sir.—Having for several years used your medicines, doubtingly at first, but after experiencing their efficacy, with full confidence, it is no less a pleasure than a duty to thankfully acknowledge the advantage we have derived from them. The pills are resorted to as ofter as occasion requires, and always with the desired effect. The Ready Relief cannot be better described than it is by its name. We apply the liniment frequently and freely, almost indicating the promised "Relief."

Truly yours, (signed)

De, Radway, Thurlow weed,

A BARE CHANCE FOR AGENTS. THE COMPLETE HOME! By Mrs. JULIA McNAIR WRIGHT.

By Mrs, JULIA McNAIR WRIGHT.

The theme is one upon which the author brings to bear the fruits of years of research, observation and travel, both in this country and the old world. The full-paged colored plates, illustrating Ancient and Modern Homes are marvels of elegance and good taste. No work treating this subject in detail, has heretofore been offered, and hence Agents will have a clear field. Competent critics pronounce it the great book of the year.
