WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., July 30, '81. There is already talk about effices even among steady going politicians. The President is so much better and his recovery seems almost certain, that the long restrained anxiety to see offices filled begins to reassert itself among Republicans. The party has been in power so long, and being without principles, is so much a machine to be kept going by the judicious distribution of public patronage that its managers admit all days lost which see no progress in the great work of distributing offices. Very numerous charges, it is said, were to be made during the President's absence from Washington this month. These of course, were not carried out. The demand for others now waxes strong.

Several interesting points will arise in the election of a succession to Mr. Burch, Secretary of the Senate, who died here this week. For instancewill the Senate elect a successor before the New York Senators are sworn in? If they attempt this, will the Republicans refuse to vote and so make a dead lock? If the New York Senators are sen is the head of the party in Maine, and said to be admirably fisted for the
