Talking Gamblers.

"It's a queer lay out, any way." "It is so. There's something behind all this fuss. It's all right from Johnson; I knew he'd give it to the boys, but this business of trying to paralyze him with Black and Thorman just gets me."

"Me, too; why the devil they want to use that old Wakefield stuff, and squirm round the way they do, is d-funny. The boys can't make it out, and it beats me. Did you hear that one of the fly cops was down last night at-" (here a well-known bagnio was named), "and he said they were getting something about Charley, and had the dead wood on him? I heard that it was all a putup job, and one of the rollers (keno)was there to fix up a story. I'd be kind o' scary if I was the boy; there's something behind all this. Hanged if I don't think it's a game to draw them out."

The speakers were sitting at a corner as to cause it to wilt. Onions keep well table in a Pine street restaurant much in a cold, dry cellar, if not too early; they frequented by sporting men. They seemed to be discussing the Johnson-Police Board Imbroglio with a cover the pile with a little straw or coarse degree of openness, not to say recklessness, very unusual among gamesters, and this was explained further on.

"The boys are kind o' down on me for throwing up my hands when I did."

"Blest if I ever saw into that either. When I went East you were running full blast, and the first thing after I got back a fellow asked me to pool with him to buy out your traps. They told me you gave in the first thing when this Johnson law took hold."

"Yes, that's their story; but this is the way it was: I didn't want to go to the penitentiary, no more did they. We talked the thing over, and says I, the first fellow they get hold of you bet they'll railroad him through. Some of the others talked that way, but there was boys from Pate's and the way they shouted was different, I wouldn't listen to 'em, and told 'em to bring along the old man to speak for himself. One of it is tenacious; but the most desirable state them said, 'Why, the old man's going to is that of waxy, when it is easily moulded good after-meat course, eaten wih powdersell out himself.' That settles it, says I. He don't take any risk; no more do 1. You see I didn't tell 'em, but I happened to know there was a detective pretty solid with Pate at that time, and I thought if he'd go back on Wakefield he might leave us to hold the bag too. Well, the end of it was four of us agreed to draw out that night, and next day, when we heard Tony Huebler meant business, we wanted the others out, too. Some of 'em talked of going over the river, but I saw a lawyer there, and he rich quality; the nutty smell and rich arosaid it was just as risky in Illinois.
