A Barren Plum Tree.

Plums are attacked by two insect pests. One is the curculio which makes a crescent mark on the young fruit, and one is the plum gouger, which lays an egg in the plum and causes a drop a puffy, brownish decayed ball. The only effective way to avoid these pests is to make a poultry yard around the plum trees and scatter the feed about them, so that the fowls will scatter the soil and pick up the insects. It is not the insects that fly that do the damage but those hatched in the ground from the fallen fruit, which come up in the spring and attack the tree. The more the ground about the trees is disturbed the better for them.

Suitable Manures.

All vegetables that are grown for their leaves or stems require an abundance of nitrogenous manures, and it is useless to attempt vegetable gardening without it. To this class belong cabbage, lettuce, spinach, etc. The other class, which is grown principally for its seeds or pods, as beans, peas, etc., does not require much manure of this character; in fact, the plants are injured by it. It causes too great a growth of stem and leaf, and the earliness-a great aim in vegetable growing-is injuriously affected. Mineral manures, as wood ashes, bonedust, etc. are much better for them. For vegetables requiring rich stable manure it is best that they have it well rotted and decayed. Fothing has yet been found so well fitted for the purpose as old hotbed dung, though to the smell ne trace of "ammonia" remains in it. -Gardener's Monthly.

Biting Horses.

Horses have been successfully cured of this vice by putting a piece of hard wood an inch and a half square in the animal's mouth, about the same length as an ordinary snaffle bit. It may be fastened by a throng of leather passed through two holes in the ends of the wood, and secured to the bridle. It must be used in addition to the bit, but in no way to impede the working of the bit. Rarey adopted this plan with the zebra in the Zoo, which was a terrible brute at biting. Mr. Rarey succeeded, however, in taming and training him to harness, and drove him through the streets of London. Aniwith pitchfork handles, whips, etc. An apple, crust of bread, a piece of beet, of the sickness. etc., and a kind pat, but firm, watchful hand and eye, with the use of the above wooden bit, will cure the most inveterate biter. The fact that he cannot shut his mouth or grip anything soon dawns upon him, and then he is conquered .- Toronto Globe.

The Gadfly and Its Grub.

Farmers who study the habits of their sheep have observed that in the hot months they gather into bunches on bare spots, with heads close together and noses to the ground, and kick and stamp and snuff, seeming to be on guard against some wily foe. The enemy is the gadfly, and at the first chance it dodges in and deposits eggs in the nostrils of the sheep. These soon hatch into larvæ, or young grubs, and crawl up into the cavity of the head and attach themselves to the membranous linings and remain there until the next spring and grow to be an inch or more long, and then descend to the ground, and when the proper season arrives for laying eggs are developed into gadflies, ready to attack the sheep again. Some claim that this grub in the head is fatal to well-caredfor sheep; others deny this. Some writers say there are never more than two grubs in a sheep's head, one in each nostril, and sometimes produce blindness; others claim to have found a score or more. The first sign of this malady is an aimless wandering around, and a twisting about of the head, and when much advanced a discharge at the nose, occasionally streaked with blood.

The remedies are various. Randall and the American Stock Book, both good authorities, say tobacco smoke blown through the stem of a pipe into the nostrils, or tobacco-water thrown up the nostrils with a syringe (being careful not to let much of it get into the throat), is efficacious. Another writer says: Mix turpentine and sweet oil, half and half, hold the nose up and pour in slowly and carefully to prevent choking by the fluid entering the windpipe and lungs. This is said to be very efficacious. Dr. Johnson, a veterinary surgeon, says: Turpentine and linseed oil, equal parts, 8 ounces; add half dram carbolic acid crystals; mix, give table-spoonful on tongue every night. Some claim that turpentine on the side of the head opposite the locality of the grub, letting it soak in some, will cause the sheep to sneeze, throwing the grub out. Other remedies might be mentioned but the above are considered as good as any. It is the opinion of many shepherds that is where they do the most harm.—Carlos Mason, Lake County, Ohio.

The Chief's Overdose.

Seamen have to encounter the perils of the land as well as those of the ocean. When sailing among the islets of the Southern Pacific, whose superstitious inhabitants are as fickle as the inconstant wind, they wear their lives on their sleeves. The slightest mistake may turn the friends of to-day into the foes of to-morrow.

Not many years ago, a whaler, cruising in the South Pacific, luffed up to a little island in order to fill the almost empty water casks. The natives, who were on the shore in great numbers, were seen beating their breasts and uttering mournful cries. Several of them swam off to the ship and made the captain understand that some important person was sick and in need of medical treatment. He, being a kind-hearted man, invited them by signs to bring the sick person on board. They heeded the invitation and brought off the king of the island, who had not been ill long enough for the wailing and the beating of tom-toms to produce fatal results.

The captain gave the chief a small dose of one of those "cure-alls," usually kept in a ship's medicine chest. The medicine, the absence of tom-toms, and the faith of the sufferer wrought a speedy improvement. On the following evening the captain thought it safe mals with this vice should be treated to allow him to return, not, however, kindly in the stable, and not abused until he had given him a bottle of the medicine to be used in case of a return

> That night the chief had another attack. Thinking that if a small dose had partly relieved him, a larger one would effect a complete cure, he poured the contents of the bottle down his

The captain, suspecting, from the ominous stillness, that something was wrong, took the precaution of stowing firearms into the boat that was to tow off the water-casks. It had scarcely touched the shore when the natives attacked the crew, who by the greatest expedition were scarcely able to regain the ship; which at once set sail and de-sland. He learned that another whaler, putting in there for water, was mistaken for his vessel, and several of its crew severely wounded, before the natives discovered their error.

The natives had carefully kept the bottle, thinking it an instrument of sorcery, because, though heavy, it could not be made to sink.

THE BAD BOY AND HIS PA. Playing Burglar on the Old Gentleman and The Way It Worked. "I heard ma tell pa to bring up another bottle of liniment last night,' the bad boy remarked to the grocery man. "When ma corks herself, or has a pain anywhere, she just uses liniment for all that is out, and a pint bottle don't last more than a week. Well, I told my chum, and we laid for pa. This liniment ma uses is offul hot, and almost blisters. Pa went to the Langtry show, and did not get home till eleven o'clock, and me and my chum decided to teach pa a lesson. I don't think it is right for a man to go to the theaters and not take his wife or his little boy. So we concluded to burgle pa. We agreed to lay on the stairs, and when he came up my chum was to hit him on the head with a dried bladder, and I was to stab him on the breast pocket with a stick, and break the liniment bottle, and make him think he was killed. It couldn't have worked better if we had rehearsed it. We had talked about burglars at supper time and got pa nervous, so when he came up stairs and was hit on the head with the bladder, the first thing he said was 'burglars, by mighty, and he started to go back, and then I hit him on the breast pocket, where the bottle was, and then we rushed by him, down stairs, and I said in a stage whisper, 'I guess he's a dead man,' and we went down cellar and up the back stairs to my room and undressed. Pa hollered to ma that he was murdered, and ma called me, and I came down in my night-shirt, and the hired girl she came down, and pa was on the lounge, and he said his life-blood was fast ebbing away. He held his hand on the wound and said he could feel the warm blood trickling down to his boots. I told pa to stuff some tar into the wound, such as he told me to put on my lip to make my mustache grow, and pa said, 'My boy, this is no time for trifling. Your pa is on his last legs. When I come up stairs I met six burglars, and I attacked them and forced four of them down, and was going to hold them and send for the police, when two more, that I did not know about, jumped on me, and I was getting the best of them, when one of them struck me over the head with a crow-bar and the other stabbed me to the heart with a butcher knife. I have received my death wound, my boy, and my hot blood, that I offered up so freely for my country, in her time of need, is passing from my body, and soon your pa will be only a piece of poor clay. Get some ice and put on my stomach, and all the way down, for I am burning up.' I went to the water pitcher and got a chunk of ice and put inside pa's shirt, and while ma was tearing up an old skirt to stop the flood of blood, I asked pa if he felt better, and if he could describe the villains who had murdered him. Pa gasped and moved his legs to get them cool from the clotted blood, he said, and he went on: 'One of them was about six foot high and had a sandy mustache.
