The Early Presidential Outlook.

The New York Times has gleaned the Presidential field at this early day. not only by States, but by reports from know that President Arthur's summer every important local political centre, trip has at last been definitely arrangand it foots up the present probable votes in the two conventions of next year as follows :

In the general dullness of news, it was worth the effort to make such a calculation of present party sentiment on the Presidential question ; but, however carefully and exhaustively done, it is of little value as an index of what either party may incline to do one year hence. There is no risk in assuming that Blaine will lead all Republican candidates in positive stength, if he shall enter the field at all; and it is easy to understand that Tilden will ral ly more positive following than any other Democrat can command, if he shall be among the Democratic entries; but will either Blaine or Tilden be candidates in 1834 ?

It is more than probable that both the candidates for 1881 willnbe created by circumstances yet to transpire. The next session of Congress will be neither more nor less than the grand skirmish of the Presidential battle. With a brevert Republican Senate, a radical Democratic House and a Republican President looking for his own nomination, there will be only ceaseless jostling toward the White House, Legislation, however important to the country, will be hindered or advanced as party interest shall dictate in the two houses, and the Executive duties will te performed with a singleness of purpose to make Arthur his own successor. In all these movements and counter-movements, it is likely that those who most press themselves will land in the rear, but it is likely that the events of the next session will unex-

that Senator Wade Hampton will be one of the party.

At noon on Thursday last the great strike of the Western Union and Rapid Transit telegraph operators was inaugurated. The rumor that Gen. Grant had fallen dead in the streets of Chicago during the morning from appoplexy was construed as the signal for country offices to join in the strike, as word of that kind could more likely reach them than a cipher message. The rumor was given out at exactly 11.45 a.m., and caused a most pio found sensation wherever it gained publicity. The evening papers bristled, teemed with obituaries, accompanied by excuses for the meagre particulars of the general's sudden death, and the telegraph centres were besieged with inquiri-s as to the true situation of affairs.

The strikers demand an increase of 15 per cent, on salaries, total abolition of Sunday work, unless for extra pay, a reduction of the working hours from 10 to 8 in day time aud 7 hours for night work. It is believed that the companies would have conceded some of these points, but not all. The operators demanded all or nothing, and being refused they made a general strike throughout the entire country. Of the probable duration of the strike and the final result nothing can of course be said at this time, excepting that it forebodes to be long and tough. The companies are fast substituting new operators and are getting along as best they can under the circumstances, while the strikers are supported and encouraged by their own organization
