-Advertising is the soul of trade. As all mercantile and mechanical pursuits strive to increase and prosper, the knowledge of their location and the nature of their business must be heralded abroad. For the attainment of this columns of the home newspaper are the proper channel through which merchants and mechanics must let the public know what they have and what they are doing, and where they carry on bus iness. And right here we would remind business men in this section that the JOURNAL is a splendid advertising medium because it reaches nearly every home in these valleys. At the same time it puzzles us that a town of the size of Millheim must go without license for two successive years when its smaller sister towns are privileged in that respect right along. Is it because Judge Furst and his associates doubt our people's ability to take care of themselves in case there is license? It would look so. As far as we know the landlords of both hotels in this place have been keeping quiet and orderly houses during the past year and have abided by the law to the letter. The JOURNAL reached us last week, condderably enlarged, and greatly improved in appearance. We saw the enlargement mentioned in the Saturday edition of the Phila. Times.

The license question has finally been settled and no license granted in this end of the county. The impression this would generally create is that we are all in the habit of using too much liquor, or that we have no landlords in this part capable of running a public house. We take the ground that where hotels are necessary they should be granted license and then made to comply with the law, which is strong enough if properly enforced. Whenever the hotels have no license the distillers have it all their own way and we consider that a licensed hotel in a community does not half the harm that a distillery does.

The party who imade the report against the distillery here has under oath said that his charges were not true.
