Triumph of Electricity

Successful Test of an Electric Locomotive in the Lykens Valley Coal Mine. The electric plant which has been erected at the colliery of the Lykens Valley coal company, in the upper end of Dauphin Co., proves to be a complete success. The motor or electric locomotive on its first trial trip ran into the mine a distance of over 1,000 feet and again. Another and more successful test was made shortly afterward, when the electric motor was run into the mine a distance of over one mile. Ten cars were attached to it. Five of these were loaded with coal and five with rocks. The load, weighing over 112,000 pounds, was drawn without the least difficulty. All curves, some very sharp, and grades were surmounted. The locomotive is now making regular trips, running a mile in about four and a half minutes. The full power of the motor has not been tested yet, but it is thought that it will be able to pull twenty five cars. At present it does away with twelve mules, that being the number required to haul the cars from this drift. All the experts who witnessed the test express themselves highly pleased. The chief engineer of the Union electric company of Philadelphia, has offered as a representative of that company to replace, at their own expense, all the heavy machinery used to handle the coal and the heavy hoisting engines with electricity provided that the company will purchase the electric plant if it proves successful.
