An Essay on Slavery,
Designed to exhibit in a new point of view its effects on morals, industry, and the peace of society. Some facts and calculations are offered to prove the labor of freemen to be much more productive than that of slaves; that countries are rich, powerful and happy, in proportion as the laboring people enjoy the fruits of their own labor; and hence the necessary conclusion, that slavery is impolitic as well as unjust.

Extracts from the Couriers Politique, and the Departments.
National Convention and Club of Jacobins.

A deputation of the section of Quinzevingt, invites the society not to listen to the denunciations which are made to it against Bourdon de L'Oise, Fabred'Eglantine, and Camille of du Moulins. It declares that all good citizens will haste to take their part against intriguers.

This section gives great praise to Roufin and Vincent.

Robespierre says, “We are not to employ ourselves here concerning private quarrels between the members. The public papers are going to shew to all Europe that these great successes, which ought to have raised you to the summit of enthusiasm, have made so little impression on you, that you have done nothing but continue the vile debates of the fittings of October.”

“Pitt in his fright,” thought that it was all over with the abominable league of kings, that the Jacobins were likely to conquer and make good use of their victories, by endeavouring to exterminate all tyrants who have escaped from the vengeance of the people; but he will have cause to rejoice when he learns, that if there is any place where the successes of the Republic have not produced any effect, it is in the very club of the Jacobins.

Citizen Mamien sent details relative to Bourdeaux, and the dispositions which reign there; he was not then sufficiently acquainted with the circumstances.

The pieces performed in the patriotic theatres are listened to with coolness.

Couthon in the National Convention, “There are now only 30 millions in assignats in the national treasury: There have been burnt 100 millions livres in assignats.”

Letter from Garreau and Monestier of Bayonne.—“The arrangements which we have made have disquieted our enemy. The western army is worthy of the Republic.”

Herauld de Sechelles has been accused for having had connections with suspected men, such as Prolly, Dn Buillon, and Pareyra.

Club of Jacobins.—A letter from St. Quentin denounces the furnishers of the waggons, and adds, “the roads as far as Guise are covered with horses who died for want of food, and it is, in short, impossible to get along.”

There are new troubles in the department of Cherbourg—the rebellion must be smothered in its cradle, the effects must be dreadful—La Vendee is now a striking example.

Convention.—Le Clerc who arrived from Toulon says the arsenal is not damaged, that all the working materials have been removed to a place of security by a courageous citizen, on whom the nation should bestow much praise.

Le Vasseur says so great is the merit of the men truly born for the happiness of the people, that they still serve their country, even after they have ceased to exist. Marat who well knew Dugommier ceased not to recommend him to the patriots, & it was Dugommier who directed the plan of the attack of Toulon; therefore it is Marat, who even after his death contributed to the recapture of Toulon.

Le Clerc attributed these successes to Robespierre, who so energetically undertook the defence of Barrias and Desfron, basely calumniated by the tribunal of the National Convention, by which he preserved them for the nation.

Jacobin Club.—The society passed to the examination of its members. Dubois Crance demanded that every person who wished to be admitted into the society should first be asked, “What hast thou done to merit hanging, in case a counter-revolution should happen?”

Many members proposed different means on this subject, but they were all put aside, by the order of the day.

Trolee, representative of the people, was called upon to undergo his examina-
