An Essay on Slavery,

Designed to exhibit in a new point of view its effects on morals, industry, and the peace of society. Some facts and calculations are offered to prove the labor of freemen to be much more productive than that of slaves; that countries are rich, powerful and happy, in proportion as the laboring people enjoy the fruits of their own labor; and hence the necessary conclusion, that slavery is impolitic as well as unjust.

A M E R I C A.

NASSAU, (N. P.) April 1.

If we are to form any judgment of the conduct that will be adopted by the American Congress, from the language used very generally in the southern states, it would appear that a rupture between England and America is almost certain.

Should such an event really take place —and that it may not, must be the wish of every real friend to either nation—we may expect to see the manners of the French Republicans strictly copied in America; and revolutionary tribunals, guil-lotines, with all the other paraphernalia of French liberty, become as common in the one country, as they are now in the other.

It is said that an expedition is actually undertaking against New-Orleans from Kentucky, and that 6000 men are employed on it.

It is also surmised, that some of the French frigates which lately arrived in the Chesapeake are to co-operate in this enterprise, and may daily be expected to make their appearance at the mouth of the Mississippi.

April 4

Notwithstanding the extreme violence of many people in the Southern states, and the attachment they avow for the French Republic— it is with difficulty that a cool dispassionate observer can bring himself to regard war between England and America, as an event within the scope of probability.

Cui bono? What good can possibly result to America from such a situation?
None—but on the contrary, every ill that ought to be guarded against by a nation whose people are chiefly employed in agriculture, the fisheries, and commerce.

On the part of England, there is evidently a disposition to cultivate a good understanding with America. The revocation of the instructions of November 6th, is a fresh proof of it; and it is more than probable that this was done in consequence of representations from the American minister at our court.

A true politician suffers no resentments to enter into his system—with him the invariable object of pursuit is what can best advance the interests of his constituents; and war, as being uniformly unprofitable, he never has recourse to, when it can be avoided with any appearance of attention to national dignity.

One of the advantages, which the original projectors of the separation of the British colonies from the mother country promised to themselves, was the being thereby precluded from all hazard of being involved in the wars of the European powers; and thus, aloof from, and unconcerned in the politics and intrigues of the old world, enabled to cultivate the arts of peace in perfect security, and to afford an asylum to the oppressed and distressed of every other nation.

But all this prospect of human felicity, so flattering to the mind of the philanthropist, must at once be done away, should America be drawn into the present war between France and her powerful enemies. And in return for this sacrifice, what can France give?

UNITED STATES.

WILMINGTON, May 14.

We are favored by the copy of a letter from a respectable young gentleman, in St. Vincents, to his father in this town, dated April 9, wherein he mentions his "visit to the Botanical Garden, and in glowing colours describes the pleasure he felt on beholding the bread-fruit-tree of Otaheite, particularly described by the late Capt. Cook, likewise the apple-tree, of said Island, in full bloom. In about 18 months, the bread-fruit-tree will bear; and all the hopes that were entertained by that once famed circumnavigator, of the great use and comforts of life that might be derived from its introduction to these climes, will be realized.—All the return we can make to his memory, is the grateful tribute of a tear.

"The trees whose bark yields both kinds of cinnamon, are also here; the
