"We have no small degree of pleasure in announcing the present work to our readers; as one which from the streedom of its principles, is eminently deserving of attention. By this eulogium, we would by no means be understood to subscribe to all the principles which these volumes contain. Knowledge is not yet arrived at that degree of certainty which is requisite, for any two men to think alike of all subjects; neither has language attained that confishent accuracy, which can enable them to convey their thoughts, even when they do think alike, in a manner perfectly correct and intelligible to both. These difficulties are only to be overcome by a patient, incessant, and benevolent investigation.

are only to be overcome by a patient, incessant, and benevolent investigation.

"Many of the opinions which this work contains, are bold; some of them are novel; and some doubtless are erroneous:—but that which ought to endear it even to those whose principles it may offend, is the strength of argument adduced in it to prove, that peace and order most effectually promote the happiness after which political reformers are panting;—that as the progress of knowledge is gradual, political reform ought not to be precipitate;—and that convolsive violence is dangerous not only to individuals (for that result comparatively would be of small account) but to the general cause of truth. It is the opposite of this principle that inspires the enemics of political enquiry with so much terror; it is the supposition that thange must inevitably be attended by the turbulence and injustice of commotion; and that innovation cannor be made without the interven ion of evils more destructive than those which are intended to be reformed. Under the conviction of this philanthropic fentiment, of calm and gradual retorm (which in its proper place he has sully illustrated) Mr. Godwin proceeds without scruple first to enquire into present evil, through its essential branckes, and next to demonstrate suture good.

"Oividing his work into eight books, and making the importance of political institutions the subject of the first, he begins by an attempt to prove the omnipotence of government over the moral habits of mankind; and that on these moral habits their wisdom, virtue and felicity depend."
