

PHILADELPHIA,

WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 23, 1795.

"The Federalist," No. VIII, will appear Tomorrow.

The ship Dispatch, captain Morton, is arrived at Newcattle from Havre de Grace, which she left the 17th October.

By this vessel we have Paris papers to the 14th October, which contain a variety of important intelligence, of which we can at present give only the heads, viz.

Peace had been concluded between France and Naples; the principal article of which appears to be, the exclusion of English vessels from their ports.

The army of the Rhine and Motelle had gained a complete victory over the Austrians, in the neighbourhood of Buchan, on the 3d Oct: the fruits of this victory were 2 colours, 6 cannon, 3000 prisoners, (of which 56 officers) already arrived at head-quarters; and 2000 more prisoners were on their journey.

The army of Italy had also been successful, as appears by the following dispatch. Extract of a letter from general Buonaparte, dated 10th Vendemiaire.

"We have taken the port of Pradella, that of Cerere, and are now blockading the citadel of Mantua."

Previous to the above, general Buonaparte had taken 1100, out of 1500 hundred who had made a sortie from Mantua.

The army of the Sambre and Meuse, under general Bournonville, remained behind the Sieg; several slight actions had happened, but without any decision.

The town of Neuwied, on the Rhine, had been declared neutral by both armies.

The archduke Charles, with a part of his army, had marched to arrest the progress of general Moreau, who continued victorious.

The approach of peace was considered as very uncertain when the Dispatch left France, although an English agent was hourly expected at Paris.

The papers say, that lord Malmesbury was appointed the negotiator.

In our paper of to-morrow, we shall give translations from the Paris prints, containing the particulars of the above interesting intelligence.

Amer. D. Adv.

The archduke's army did not undertake any thing from the 17th to the 27th September. Kleber attacked and defeated the Austrians during that time, in several partial engagements. On the 29th, the archduke attacked the famous Tete de Poat near Neuwied, on the right bank of the Rhine; but was repulsed with great loss. On the 30th September, the archduke left the Lower Rhine and the Mein with 15000 men, in order to prevent being surrounded by Moreau—He left the command of the remnant of his powerful army to general Werneck.

The official accounts from the army of the Sambre and Meuse do not reach further than the 29th September, when the divisions of Hardy, Lesveve and Championet pursued three Austrian columns beyond the river Selz. Bournonville had taken the command in chief of the army, and there was every probability that this army would soon drive the Austrians from the Lahn and the Mein. (Aurora.)

COMMUNICATIONS.

It is with peculiar satisfaction (says a correspondent) that the friends of our country and that great and good man, the Vice President of the United States, observe that several editions of his valuable work, "the Defence of the American Constitutions," are about being published. The English editions, of which there have been two or three, besides several of the first volume in this country, are all sold; and the recent investigation of its principles, has excited a very general curiosity to read the work. The publishers, one in Philadelphia, the other in Baltimore, will doubtless find it a good speculation. A French edition of this work has been published in Paris, and all the world is informed how much it has contributed to the establishment of just republican principles of government in that country. If the French should finally establish a free republic, it will be owing to their adhering to the maxims and principles adopted from that work. In this country, those principles will become the political creed of the free citizens of our independent republic. Experience, the great teacher, in every hour appreciating their truth, and bearing testimony to their solidity. The work can scarcely be read unjudiciously, without making converts to its doctrines; and in proportion as the expand their influence, and take root in the American mind, in the same proportion our chance for political freedom, peace and permanent happiness, is increased and made certain.

Let every man read and judge for himself—A subject that requires the laborious researches of unrivalled genius for forty years, is not to be judged of by partial, mutilated quotations, commented upon by politicians of a day, the ephemeral abettors of a profligate party.

BY THIS DAY'S MAILS.

NEW-YORK, November 22.

Extract of a letter from the editor's correspondent at Bourdeaux, dated October 4.

"A courier extra last night, brings accounts, that the archduke has been defeated again by general Moreau.

The success of the army in Italy, under the command of general Buonaparte, must astonish all Europe. Peace must follow on the continent very soon. The report is, that Mantua has surrendered with general Wurmsler and all his army. This news has arrived from Marseilles, and it is said the accounts are gone to Paris. We may not hear it confirmed by the official letters in less than five days." The letter from which the preceding is an extract, accompanied a file of the Eclair, printed at Paris; but their latest date is Sept. 29, not so late by nine days as Paris accounts received by the Fame, from London. This circumstance being taken into view, the authenticity of the accounts contained in the letter is rendered suspicious; the latter account, however, via Marseilles on its way to Paris, may possibly be true, & perfectly agrees with gen. Angereau's expedition, expressed in his letter, published in yesterday's Argus, dated September 28.
