No book displays a more sublime theology, inculcates a purser morality, or breathes a more ardent and expansive philanthrophy St. Pierre enables us to contemplate this universe with other eyes; has surnissed new arguments to combat others in the season of the power of contradiction, the doctrine of, a universal providence, has excited a warmer interest in favor of suffering humanity, and has discovered sources, unknown before of moral and intellectual enjoyment.

unknown before of moral and intellectual enjoyment.

The avidity with which the clergy and other learned characters in New-England, have purchased the English edition of this delightful performance, and the opinion entertsined by them; and warranted by experience, that although written before the "Age of Reason," a part of it contains a more folid and compleat refuration of it, than any thing published fince, are perhaps a fullicient recommendation of the STUDLES of NATURE; in which the Botanist, the natural and christian Philosopher, the friend of order and government are equally interofted, and by which they will be equally gratified.

As no pains nor expense have been spared in procuring suitable paper and able artists, to render the work worthy of the public; and as the subscribers have expressed their approbation of it, the publisher flatters himself, that gentlessen, who on account of the bad papar and print of some American editions, give generally the preference to the English, will honor this with a comparison, before they purchase.

This has been pronounced the most useful and the cheapest back published in America. It was undertaken feveral years since, under the auspices of Lord Sandwich while he was at the head of the Admiralty of England, and from which every assigned ance necessary to complete so arduous a work, was readily surnished, but it never made its appearance until last year. The savor it obtained with Massers and other gentlemen concerned in Navigation induced the publisher to prepare this edition wherein the American Ports, Harbors, &c. have been controcted by a gentleman of great abilities, and extensive information on the subject.

CONG'RESS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, May 16.

Mr. D. Foster made a report on the petition of Joseph Cowperthwaite, Naval Agent of Georgia, who prayed to be released of the payment of a sum of 800 dollars of which he had been robbed. The report was unfavourable, and ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. Sewall, an additional member was added to the committee for the protection of commerce and the defence of the country, in place of Mr. Pinckney.

Mr. Sewall faid, the committee for the protection of commerce and defence of the country, to whom it was referred to enquire into what measures would be proper to be taken respecting Aliens, were of opinion their instructions did not go to a sufficient extent, and directed him to propose to the House the following resolution for adoption:

"Resolved that the committee on that part of the President's Speech which relates to commerce and the describe of the Country be authorised to consider the danger which may result by means of Aliens, and other disaffected or seditions Persons residing authin the United States, and what measures ought to be taken for scenning, considering inclinating such to respect by bill or otherwise."

Ordered to lie on the table.

what mealures ought to be taken for Jeauring, removing, or otherwife refireting fuch powers, and to report by bill or otherwife.

Ordered to lie on the table.

The House having again resolved itself into a committee of the whole on the State of the Union, and the question for striking out the third section being resumed,

Mr. GALLATTI said, this section contemplated giving to the President the power of admitting men into military service, under the name of Volunteer Corps, who are liable to be called upon to do military duty, at any time when the President shall think proper, after they shall have offered, and he has accepted of their service. Upon the first confideration of this section an objection was made on constitutional ground to this mode of raising soldiers, supposing they were to be considered as Militia. To this it was answered that these volunteers were not to be considered as Militia, but as making a part of the army of the United States.

It appeared to him difficult precisely to delineate and desire what kind of Corps this is of the United States.

It appeared to him difficult precifely to delineate and define what kind of Corps this is to be. In fome respects it will be fimilar to the Militia; in some respects to the regular army of the United States, and again distinguishable from both. They are in some degree similar to the Militia, inasmuch as they are to remain at home, except upon special calls of the President to do duty. The Volunteers, when called into actual service, and whilst remaining in it, are to be under the same rules, and entitled to the same pay and emoluments as the other troops. The Militia are like these Volunteers subject to the same rules and regulations, and to the same pay and and regulations, and to the same rules and regulations, and to the same pay and emoluments with the army of the United States; and like these Volunteers, when not called into service, are not subject to the rules and regulations of the army, nor entitled to their pay and emoluments. In these particulars, therefore, this corps very much refembles the Militia bles the Militia bles the Militia.

In other respects, these Volunteers very much resemble the army of the United States; inasmuch as they are to be enlisted (not properly so by name, but in a way equally affectual by giving their consent to serve) they are also to be considered as making part of the army, though remaining at home; they are also like the army, inasmuch as their officers are not appointed by themselves, or by the Individual States, as in the Militia, but by the President of the United States; and inasmuch that they will be obliged to do duty for the whole two years, if required, whilst the Militia do duty by rotation, according to regulatia do duty by rotation, according to regula-tions provided for the purpose. Seeing, there-fore, that these Volunteers are in some re-spects like the Militia, and i others like the regulars, it was not to be wondered at that a conflictutional objection should have arisen. The Constitution does not recognize more than two descriptions of troops, viz. Army and Militia. The Army proposed to be raised by means of these Volunteers is of a kind not known in the Constitution, but seems to be of a description about half way betwixt a regular standing army and a militia. If the principle proposed to be adopted in this section be admitted, the confequence may be, that all the regulations provided in the Conflitution for fecuring a good Militia, may be evaded, and the whole of the Militia he turned into a kind the whole of the Militia he turned into a kind of Public Standing Army. For supposing that the regulations for the government of these Volunteers are more favourable intheir effects than those provided for the Militia, and it is more advantageous to a man to belong to a Volunteer Corps than to the Militia, citizens would generally leave the Militia, and arrange themselves under the head of Volunteers. It is true, there are some provisions in this section which may have a tendency to prevent this; but on the other hand, there are some provisions which would encourage them to do it. For instance, the clause which would encourage them to do it. For instance, the clause which directs that these Volunteers shall only be emdirects that these Volunteers shall only be employed in their own, or an adjoining State, is an advantage, as the Militia, whilft in service, can be called any where as ordinary regular troops. The objections, therefore, against raising Volunteers of this description are, that it will have a tendency to destroy the Militia, and convert the whole of it into an army, thereby transferring the power of appointing the Officers from the Individual States, to the President of the United States.

Waving, however, the constitutional objection, he could make a few remarks on the expediency of the measure. It appeared to him, on the one hand, that the advantages contemplated by this clause, will not be obtained, plated by this claufe, will not be obtained, and on the other, that great inconveniencies would arise from carrying it into effect, he believed also the advantages might be obtained without having recourse to this provi-sion. If the real intention of the bill is only tender of their fervices as Volunteers for the defence of their fervices as Volunteers for the defence of the United States, he believed the provisions already existing in the Militia Law are sufficient to effect the object. By the law it is provided that a certain number of Vo-lunteer Corps may be attached to each batta-lion of the Militia; and if a number of young men wish to make a voluntary tender of their service, he saw no difficulty in their doing it as a part of the militia of the United States. As far as respects the state of Pennsylvania, several of the batralions, which are entitled by law to have Light Infantry, or Risle Men, attached to them, have them not at present. And he believed scarcely any of the Light
