IT is perhaps futile to expect to work conviction in the minds of so inveterate and vicious a class of men, as the Democrats of America, by any arguments however forcible, or any display of truth, however irrefragable: These writings are, however, calculated to produce a more important and useful effect, by placing the subject in its true light before honest men, who are uninformed, or have been misinformed as to the nature and objects of those bills.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.
JUNE 27, 1798.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That by virtue of an act, passed during the present session of Congress, for much of the act entitled "An Act making further provision for the support of public credit, and for the redemption of the public debt"—passed the third day of March, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five, 23 bars from settlement or allowance, Certificates, commonly called Loan Office and final settlement Certificates, and Indents of interest, is suspended until the twelfth day of June, which will be in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine.

That on the liquidation and settlement of the said Certificates, and Indents of Interest, at the Treasury, the Creditors will be entitled to receive Certificates of funded Three Per Cent. Stock equal to the amount of the said Indents, and the arrearages of interest due on their said Certificates, prior to the first day of January one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one.

That the principal sums of the said Loan Office and final settlement Certificates, with the interest thereon, since the first day of January, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, will be discharged after liquidation at the Treasury, by the payment of interest and reimbursement of principal, equal to the sums which would have been payable thereon, if the said Certificates had been subscribed, pursuant to the Acts making provision for the debts of the United States, contracted during the late war, and by the payment of other sums, equal to the market value of the remaining Stock, which would have been created by such subscriptions as aforesaid, which market value will be determined by the Comptroller of the Treasury.

ORIGINAL LETTER.

LONDON, Nov. 10.

THERE is no topic more completely belonging to the regions of common place than that upon the lapse of time, and yet there is none to which we are more irresistibly brought when writing after a considerable interval to an absent friend. Even at this moment I can scarcely realize to myself the idea, that the day after to-morrow will close thirty one months since we parted. In the intervening period what mighty revolutions have taken place in the affairs of Europe! revolutions however as well known to you as to me; and which, even then, were to be expected.

You are so well acquainted with my sentiments, that it would be superfluous to tell you, how much I have been delighted with the spirit which has at length discovered itself in our country. Had it appeared in colors equally glowing a year earlier, we should at this moment have been in the full possession of those neutral rights, which an over-weening fondness, and an ill-judged admiration of one foreign power, and an unwelcome impolitic bitterness and inveteracy against another have deprived us of. A national self-esteem, is as necessary to the dignified conduct of a nation as of an individual. The language or the conduct of mean submission and avowed subserviency, are not calculated to obtain the claims of justice. A fawning, cringing, servilely adoring public agent, (Monroe) though at the same time he would seem a patron of liberty, had given to our country in France, the part of a mean suitor and the natural consequence was, that her entreaties were spurned with contempt, and she herself treated like a slave. The French government were officially told, that the people of the United States, wished nothing better than to sacrifice their most lawful interests to those of France; and their committees of public safety, and Directories were not men, to take such a declaration as a compliment, or to let such offers slip through their hands. They naturally concluded, nor was it one of their greatest errors of reasoning, that a nation whose public representative was capable of giving such assurances, must be prepared for submission to every insult, and acquiescence under every injury. To such a minister they could solemnly say that his country held its independence merely as a tenant at the will of France and be sure that he would receive it as a compliment. To him they could talk of debating themselves by discussion with his government, without any apprehension of resentment or contradiction; and although they had for months before treated him so very cavalierly, as to leave him in great perplexity of mind whether he was a public minister or not, and to put him upon ingenious stratagems to ascertain the fact, it is not at all to be wondered at, that when they found him recalled, in disgrace with his own government, they should tell him, they were sorry he was going away.

The same sort of tone, which reigns through all that man's negotiations, he had with the help of some friends and counsellors, worthy of himself, rendered the prevailing, fashionable tone of American conversation, at Paris. No man knows this better than you, who were an eye and ear witness of it. Now after that, could you possibly be surprised, at seeing repeated and solemn embassies, rejected with studied marks of contumely? Was not contempt and disdain, the natural result of such degradation? and could the opposite sentiments of consideration and respect be recovered otherwise than by a display of firmness and resolution, as far beyond the customary file of negotiation, as that duck-like manner had sunk beneath it?

The spirited attitude which we have assumed after so many and such deep provocations, has produced its natural effect too. From the first moment of its appearance, until that of its full growth, as by our last accounts it stands, those who before had met friendship with robbery, and supplication towards the borders of justice, and grown profuse in professions of complaisance and civility. While we kneeled and tied our hands behind our backs, and roared for mercy, France had nothing for us but stripes, and kicks, and cuffs; but the instant we burst our shameful bands, rise and draw the sword of defence, she has as many bows and congees and capers for favor as an old dancing master of the ancien régime, can smile for our love like Malvolio, and rather than quarrel with us, eat her leek like Pistol. All this our country will see, and of all this I hope she will not be the dupe. The first moment of our relaxation from energy would infallibly be that of her return to insolence; if we persevere as regardless of her false caresses, as we have been of her surlust menaces, we shall certainly bring her to terms of reason, and issue from the controversy with victory and with honor.
