They hail for freedom in their restless mind,
Yet still revolt when truth would let them free.
Licence they mean, when they cry LIBERTY,
For who loves that must first be wise and good.

Milton.

IF rational liberty was ever dear, and anarchy horrible and destructive; if the sacred religion and pure morality of our fathers, was ever revered for its divine authority and benign effects; if laws and customs produced by the accumulated experience of ages, have ever been useful to mankind; if domestic comfort and social order was ever enjoyed and duly estimated; if private virtue and public integrity were ever just and honorable; if, in short, all that can render life amiable and desirable,—all that can adorn and exalt civilized humanity,—have ever been duly appreciated, how great should be the alarm, when danger threatens in every shape, and from every quarter? If ever one period of time was more exigent and momentous than another, it is surely the present; when sedition, in the garb of patriotism, stalks abroad, profusely throwing on every side the seeds of discontent and discord; when faction openly wears his unblushing front; when, like the giant Anteus, it seems to have recovered fresh strength from having been once beaten to the ground, and now proudly hurls defiance in our teeth; if the present important crisis will not arouse sluggish supineness, and invigorate torpid apathy, we may conclude our fellow citizens to possess little more than vegetable existence, and rank them with those baleful weeds, whose destructive fecundity checks up the useful grain.

This is not poetic fiction, nor empty declamation, the danger of our situation cannot be exaggerated, nor is it necessary to multiply terrors to excite unnecessary alarm, let any one seriously survey the conduct of Jacobins, and say if it is possible for preparation to be too prompt, and caution too keen and vigilant; let him look at the machinations of the faction in Virginia, and some adjoining states; mark their progress, the mode by which they have indefatigably prosecuted their purposes; and tremble at the alarming height at which they have arrived. They have dared, yes, the majority of a single state assembly has openly dared to condemn one of the first of all constitutional functions in a representative government, the passing of laws by a majority; they have censured the chosen executive of the people for carrying those laws into effect; and they have in terms not to be misunderstood, invited the people to resistance, by sophistical reasonings imposed upon their judgment by artful misrepresentation, affected humility, and the cant of public love, have inflamed their passions, and left no means untried to excite rebellion. It is true the minority have expressed their abhorrence and indignation at such proceedings, and in their most excellent and judicious counter Address, by the fairest reasoning, and most powerful argument, given a complete refutation to the creed of sedition. But erroneous principles and moral depravity are seldom eradicated by argument: the experience of the world may convince us, that nothing but coercive measures can curb sedition, and tear up the roots of anarchy. What can a virtuous and enlightened minority do against a partial and interested majority, with a turbulent, blind, licentious populace at their command? What shadow of reason can be given for supposing they will stop here, and what preparation is there now actually organized to oppose them, should they go on? Has any other state formally expressed their disapprobation, and is there any appearance of general indignation discovered in the people? no, it has passed by as the common report of a day, the course of exchange, or the price of flour. To convince would be sufficient, if mankind were generally virtuous; but the mass of men are neither virtuous nor rational, they had rather adopt any opinion, than be at the trouble of thinking for themselves; and as reason has no influence in the choice, the preference is generally given to what accords with their strongest passions and favorite propensities.

This we all know, and every day offers instances; yet if a man fancied he is right himself, he is content to recline on the idle couch of mere speculative principle, regardless of his neighbor, and taking no pains to practice or propagate, what can only be rendered effectual by energy and activity. "Go to the ant, thou sluggard, and be wise" said Solomon; and the politician may as justly say to the negligent people, go to the manufacturers of treason, and the artificers of rebellion, and learn to be industrious; it is not by their virtue or their argument that they can conquer us, it is by their superior exertions, their energy, unanimity and perseverance; surely then, it is time to wake and shake off the dreams of false security—to use that judgment which truth induces—that courage which a good cause inspires—and that vigilance and exertion which alone can render abortive the intrigues and menaces of our enemies.

LONG ISLAND.

At a respectable meeting of a number of the inhabitants of the eastern part of the township of Huntington, in the county of Suffolk, and state of New-York, held at the house of Amos Willets, in said town, on the third day of January, 1799 for the purpose of taking into consideration the present tumultuous situation of our country, respecting the present administration of government.

Resolved, That Moses Blachly be chairman of this meeting, and that Daniel Keley be clerk.

Resolved, That all meetings for deliberating on public affairs ought to be convened by public notice; and as a meeting has lately been held in this town for the said purpose without sufficient public notice having been previously given to the inhabitants thereof, therefore,

Resolved, That we do wholly disapprove of the conduct of said meeting, being fully persuaded the sense of the majority of the people was not taken thereby.

Resolved, That we will support the Constitution of the United States, and the present administration thereof, in opposition to that party spirit, which has for a long time, and still continues to disturb the repose and tarnish the characters of our fellow citizens in many parts of the Union.

Resolved, That when any town pass resolutions derogatory to the character of any public officer, we conceive such resolves to be inflammatory and destructive of our government.

Resolved that Moses Blachly and Amos Willets, be a committee on the part of this meeting, to inculcate the principles contained in the foregoing resolves, and to transmit our proceedings for publication.

Signed by order of the meeting,
MOSES BLACHLY, Chairman.
Daniel Keley, Clerk.

Letter from the Minister of the Marine

On the 4th Complementary Day, Sept. 20, the brig of the Republic, the Anacreon returning from the coasts of Ireland, having on board Napper Tandy, a detachment of light artillery, and several Volunteer officers fell in, off the Orkneys, with a brig and a three masted vessel named the Tom of Lancaster. These vessels, as soon as they perceived the Anacreon bore down to attack her, and an engagement took place, but as the Anacreon had only four pounders to oppose to the twelve and fourteen pounders of the enemy, she would infallibly have been taken or sunk, had not the Officers belonging to the expedition, and a brave detachment of the 2d regiment of light artillery, who were on board, incensed at receiving the enemy's fire without being able to return it, loudly called for leave to board, amidst reiterated acclamations of Vive la Republique.

This manœuvre was immediately executed, notwithstanding the volleys of grape-shot discharged by the English, who frightened by the audacity of the French, soon abandoned the deck to take shelter below. Thus these two vessels which fell upon the Anacreon, as certain of making her a prize, were captured in an instant, and forced to strike their flags and surrender, though with a numerous artillery well served, to a handful of brave Republicans.

VIENNA, November 28.

The latest advices from Italy mention, that a division of the Russian and Turkish fleets appeared off Corfu and summoned the garrison to surrender; but this being refused and opposition made, they had taken possession of the harbour and the French shipping in it by force, and land a considerable body of troops, who forced the French to retire to their fortlets at Balley Mezzo, which would be immediately bombarded. The Greek inhabitants received the invaders with open arms.

Another division of the above-mentioned fleet blockades Ancona, and the British fleet Civita Vecchia and Gerona.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 5.

The Porte has notified the ministers of the allied courts, that Aly pacha, governor of Janina (Thessalia) had taken three Venetian posts in Albany, from the French, and was about attacking the fourth and only one in their possession. He has taken 50 prisoners, among whom are two generals and several other officers.

There is now a French newspaper published at Cairo, entitled, Courier d'Egypte, edited by citizen Marc Aurel.

BRUSSELS, November 29.

General Collard, with four columns of his troops, has totally defeated the rebels at Campine, where they had collected to the number of 6000 Altho' they fought bravely they were driven from village to village. They have left 600 dead on the field of battle. Among the prisoners are two of their chiefs, one of whom was a corporal of the Austrian regiment of Ligne. On the 25th, they reassembled at Campine, and were again beaten. In this combat they lost 800 muskets, a great quantity of bayonets, ammunition and provisions. There are still with each of the rebel columns.
