JACOB PERKINS,

HAVING invented an effectual check for detecting counterfeit Bank Paper, which has received the sanction of one Bank, and the approbation of the undersigned eminent artists, and having obtained a patent, securing to him, and to his assigns, the exclusive right of the invention, hereby offers to his fellow citizens the privilege of using it upon terms, to be agreed on between him and any person disposed to avail himself of a guard against counterfeiters.

THE undersigned having examined Jacob Perkin's new invented method to detect counterfeit Bank paper, do approve of the plan, it being impossible to engrave or sink two plates precisely alike, without the original die or hub, the counterfeit would find it impossible to make an impression which would perfectly gage with the check from the original die.

The History of Pennsylvania, By ROBERT PROUD.

In two octavo volumes.

A work entirely new, original, and highly interesting; embellished with a Portrait of the head of WILLIAM PENN, and a new Map of Pennsylvania, New-Jersey, Maryland, and the State of Delaware, and parts adjacent.

In this publication are exhibited the remarkable life, happy progress, and extraordinary prosperity of that province, till near the time of the declared independency of the United States of America; effected by such uncommon and pacific means such singular, just and prudent policy, as appear nowhere in the history of nations, to have generally, and so extensively prevailed, in any other country, to an equal degree of advancement, importance, and felicity of the people, and to generally to have excited the admiration of all observers, as in the flourishing and happy State of the province of Pennsylvania—proper to be known and remembered by all those, who wish to be informed in the extraordinary melioration of this country, and in the means of rendering the inhabitants to happy and prosperous in former time; as well as an egregious example for posterity and fur-rounding States to imitate and improve upon, &c.

[The following excellent remarks on the means confined in their application to the AUGUSTA, April 4.

JUDGE WALTON'S CHARGE

TO THE
GRAND JURY OF WASHINGTON.

Gentlemen of the Grand Jury,

IN visiting a county in the courts of which I have been accustomed to preside, I feel myself involuntarily reminded of the character which has given to it a name. A name rendered still more dear by a recent instance. In the critical and alarming situation in which we have been placed by the aggression, the violence and injustice of a nation to which we had been allied, it was found necessary, on the part of the general government, to resort to the most vigorous measures of defence. Among others, to raise armies; and the great Washington—the name a host—has been appointed to, and has accepted the command.

Near half a century ago, having saved the remnant of the British army at Braddock's defeat, a preacher of the Gospel, exclaimed from the pulpit in Virginia—"Who knows but this young man has been spared and designed by Providence to be one day the savior of his country!" This was the language of inspiration, and of prophecy: so proved by the progress of time, and of events.
We all know that he was afterwards, by the voice of three millions of people, called to the command of an army of his countrymen; and conducted it, through a great and periculous revolution, in the midst of difficulties and danger, to complete and final success, without injury or wound. But in my mind, his now consenting again to take the field, upon the present occasion, at the patriarchal age of near three score years and ten, is the most illustrious action of his life.

Gentlemen of the Grand Jury,

Having something to say to you as fellow citizens, I will confine myself to officially laying before you the charges which I have already delivered on this circuit; and request that you will consider them as equally addressed to yourselves. They contain my sense of an innovation upon the department; the particular duties of grand juries; and the general objects of courts; to restore which to their primitive purity, is my sincere desire.

And now, Gentlemen, a word to you as friends; on that spirit of remove, and for new countries, which seems to have taken such hold on the minds of my countrymen.
For many years past it has that spirit agitated men to that degree, as to induce them to leave comfortable homes and establishments, in this State, and to remove, at great expense, trouble, and inconvenience to their families, to the States of Kentucky, Tennessee and the Cumberland settlement, each of them very inconveniently situated for trade; but the most sage and judicious of these have returned. I admit that the upper part of Tennessee, below the warm Springs, that is between the Cumberland mountains, and the main continental range of them, dividing that State from North-Carolina, to be a fine, healthy country; perhaps, it is the Italy of America; but all the valuable land is monopolized, and not to be obtained. This is very much the case in Kentucky; and experience has shown, that it is not as healthy there as here. With respect to the lower part of Tennessee, or the Cumberland settlement, the lands are rich, and may yet be obtained at a moderate price; but the country is extremely sickly; and great numbers have already left it on that account. The township, called Smith-land, near the mouth of Cumberland river, which Cox attempted to erect and settle, presented, last fall, the most miserable spectacle of distress and sorrow. This I learned, when over the mountains last year, from general report, several letters which I saw, and from the examination of a man who was an eye witness to the scene.—That of one hundred and forty persons, old and young, and of either sex, there were not a sufficient number well enough to attend the dead, the dying, and the sick.

And yet, surprizing as the thing is, this spirit of emigration, has lately, in this country, received fresh vigor. This has been the effect of the establishment of a government, called the Mississippi Territory, east of the river of that name, and north of the Spanish boundary, by the government of the United States. I also admit, that this is the Nile and the Egypt of the new world; there the warmth of the climate, the natural richness of the soil, and the moist depositions of the floods, create, it is true, a wonderful fertility; but which afford, at the same time, the means of a noxious exhalation; poisoning the atmosphere; exciting fever, and producing debility, in the human system; and thus destroying by flow, but sure degrees, the vital principle. I do not, therefore, hesitate to hazard the conjecture, that the first emigrations to that country will be sickly, and short lived, and will decrease of their numbers. And although it will be supplied by fresh emigrations, such will continue to be the State of existence, and of population, for two or three ages to come; and until a generation shall grow up there, and be constituted, as it were, by the climate and the soil, and by the habits of several regular descents. In these opinions I feel myself founded, by the history of the resembling region of the old world; but facts have already arisen to justify them in that of the new.

During my long mission to the Cherokee last year, I had the best means of information. I there learned, that great numbers of the new emigrants, at the Natchez, had sickened; that some had died; and that there was considerable mortality in the army sent to defend the territory.

I have been the particular, in the great regard I have for the people of this State; and from the fullest conviction that they are better where they are. We have a finer climate, purer water, and more health.
Our soil, from sufficient experience, has been found equal to an ample reward to the industrious husbandman. Our markets are convenient, and the navigation good; and, that commerce flourishes is seen by the plenty of money and the high prices of our produce. To abandon such a State of things, for a country of flooded wilderness, covered with the unkindly skies, is the madness of folly, and the domestic mischief of a restless spirit.

Let my fellow citizens, therefore, be content in their own lot. I beg pardon, however, for going so far. They are free to act for themselves; and I will only add, that, what I have said, is the result of diligent enquiry, and of the maturest reflection: having for its basis, the best intention, to prevent distress.

Washington comm 3, March 28, 1799.
