THE Scots Irifiman has changed his game-The abandoned Jacobins, who have thook hands with fhame, and faid unto "e-vil be thou our good," he leaves to the ven-geance of their injured country.--He thinks it in vain to probe a rotten limb, for which the amputating knife is the only remedy. That part of the community which he now addreffes, although it exhibits more floridity, and appearance of health, yet it is far very far, from being found-Doubt, doubt, eternal doubt, affects the nerves with a paralytic numbreis; and an unconquerable relue-tance to declare against dangerous principles corrupts the humors-Principles, on which the bloody hand of experience has wrote " FALSE," in fuch large characters as must strike the eve of the most heedless obferver-There indeed, feems to be fo great a tendency to putrefaction, that he has little hope of the application of his Scots pills be-ing able to prevent it.

Oze fervice, however, the Scots Inifhman will render the Small Federalists : He will refcue them from oblivion-The fhades of diffinction between a Jacobin and a Small Federalist are fo fine, that a future Hiftorian would be very apt to clafs them to-gether, and deforibe them under the general name of Jacobins. But the poems of the Scots Irifhman will be an authentic record, that fuch a distinct species existed. In the latter end of the nineteenth century, the hiftorian of the United States, recording the transactions of the present time, after delineating the character of Jacobinifm, and mournfully dwelling on its deftructive progrefs, may write thus :- " It feems a ramification of the fame fect existed, at the fame time, in the United States, who pretended to refpect the government, and gave a faint approbation to the measures which it had apted to defend itfelf and the country from the dreadful effect which we have defcribed. but who fill approved and maintained the principles from which these effects proceeded. They were called in the cant of the times, small Federalists. But as no mention is made of them by any writer of thefe times, that has come down to us, except by an obfoure poet, who wrote in an old language hardly now intelligible, it is probable they degenerated into mere Jacobins, and were loft in the original Genus."

NOTES. * Their attachment to Jacobin principles, by which are meant the doctrines of equality, fovereignty of the people, and right of reliftance, which, unless exploded from all free, and legitimate governments, no regular system of civil liberty can bace long dura-tion.—Order and the absolute reign of the laws, which are the very soul of Republics, can never be established. Chaos must forever overspread the political world, and menkind will finally revert to that state of sa-vage independence, and self-government, which we see our Indian neighbours so happily enjoy, and which some humane modern philosophers have preferred to the blessings of civilized society. † An old name for Satan-This gentle-

JOEL BARLOW. One of the prettieft traits in a Jacobin's character is inconfistency; the faculty of changing fides and principles at pleafure.-The following paragraphs, refpecting Mr. ohn Adams, now Prefident, are taken from Joel Barlow's Oration in July 1787 "Adams to his immortal henor, and timely affiftance of his country, has fet the great example. His treatise, in defense of the constitution, tho confined to state republics, is calculated to do infinite fervice, by correcting thousands of erroneous sentiments arising from our nexperience-fentiments which, if uncorrected in this early stage of our political exi-Rence, will be the fource of calamities without measure and without end : Should that venerable philosopher and statesman be induced to continue his enquiries, by tracing the hiftory of confederacies, and with his usual energy and perfpicuity delineate and defend a fystem adapted to the circumstances of the United States-I will not fay he could de-ferve more from his distrest country, but he would crown a life of patriotic labors, and render an effential additional fervice to the world." So much for Borlow in 1787. Now fee Barlow illuminated, in 1798. In his letter to his brother Baldwin, which Lyon fo kindly published, speaking of Prefident Adam's Speech at the openion of Congress, he fays, "We wondered that the answer of both houses had not been, an order to fend him to a mad-houfe !" John Adams in 1787 was a "Venerable Philosopher and Statesman"-in 1798 he deferves a mad-houfe! Look ye jacobins ; where is the change ; in

John Adams or Joel Barlow? To fhow an athieft and jacobin, in his true character, let him fee what he faid and wrote one yeanago!

From the Salem (Mes.) Gazette The French Directorial Agent of Guadaoupe, Desfourneaux, has at length thrown off the mask of pretended friendship, and proclaimed hoftilities with our country. That he had Directorial instructions, to fanction the measure, no one can doubt. The brave Truxton, by capturing the free-booting Infurgent, roufed the paffions of the hypocrite, ond drew him from the cool wiles of deceit to DECLARE WAR. When a country affumes war, as means of defence-when government, property, morals and religion are threatened-when all the focial ties that make life dear to us are dependants-fhe then grafps the fword of juffice, as much as when the laws of the country employs coerfion to curb robbers and thieves; it then becomes good men to throw away the olive branch, and form themfelves into phalanxes of determined foes, to oppofe unprincipled enemies. While peace is talked of, and there are no appearances of its being realized, it has ftill a tendency to feduce the fimple, and to make them coalefce with the jacobins in their clamors against government. The partifans of France watch every crifis of public affairs with referved anxiety, while their fertile imaginations diffribute infinuations, lies and reproches, to help a fuccefsful termination in their favour. Even Desfourneaux, in his War Proclamation, is not unmindful of their intrigues, fo congenial to the French character : he pretends to refpect negociations that may have begun. But here we may fee by glancing our eyes over the proclamation, that he has variety of views to gratify; one of which is, by making to appear that the Directory are yet pacific, he ftill promifes himfelf to give activity to the machinations of the jacobins in this country ; another, by having the public plunder deposited in the national coffers of which he is the master, he defigns to enrich himfelf with American fpoils, as his predecessor our good friend Victor Hugues did. But, while morals and honesty have retreated from the French, and degraded them into a nation of freebooters, we hope the Americans will not weigh their happinels by money feales, and degrade themfelves into a nation of milers.
