FROM THE (LONDON) ORACLE.

GENERAL SUWARROW; Who has by this time assumed the chief command of the allied army in Italy, is one of the most fingular military thready, is one of the most fingular military characters of this or any other age. He is now fome-what of an advanced age; but years have neither diminished the vigor of his body or the power of his mind.

The qualities which diffinguish this extraordinary man as highly confiftent with the most elevated genius, and the superority and energy of talents in that fpecies of warfare in which he has been generally engaged. The indiferiminate flaughter of the garrifor and inhabitants of Ishinael, was in a great measure produced by the inexorable cruelty which the Turks exercised on the Russians, at that time, whenever they had them in their

Suwarrow was then under the command of Prince Potemkin, who arrived before Ifh-mael, and who, thought the place was very ftrongly fortified, and defended by a very numerous garrifon, knew the character of his comrade to well, that, pointing to the place, all the orders he gave him were—"Allez pen-dre cette ville !"—"Go and take that town !"

Suwarrow, without hefitation, affembled his division .- " You fee (faid he) that large town, and I now give it to you, with every thing that it contains-but we must first Ruffians to the affault, when they net with fo obflinate and fierce a refifance on the part of the Turks, as inflamed their valour into fury. The town, however, was taken by florm; and fuch was the exaferated rage of the affailants, that they indiferiminately maffacred every being they met with.

There was, however, a very fingular ex-There was, however, a very fingular ex-ception to this flaughter. Several hundred perfons had taken refuge in a Molque, where the conquerors were entering, when a Tur-kifh Prieft implored their elemency. The furious Ruffians immediately paid refpect to the fanctity of the place, and fpared the lives of the trembling wretches it contained, at the fame time that, after defiroying upwards of thirty thoufand human beings, they were fa-tiating their rage even on the dogs and cats which they found in the freets or houfes.

which they found in the fireets or houfes. That war being concluded, Suwarrow had a refpite until the final partition of Poland a respite until the heat partition of Foldad called him again into action. This is not an occasion for delivering an opinion on the morality of that proceeding; but furely no event ever furnished a display of more valour or military talents, than this general shewed in conducting the operations of that conclufive campaign.

Kofciufko, entrenched under the walls of Warfaw, not only baffled the efforts of the the king of Profia, but forced him to fly with his 60,000 chofen troops. The patriot then confidered the field as his own, when the arrival of Suwarrow, with only 12000 Rufhans, changed the afpect of affairs ;---the triumph of the Poles was at an end--their king dethroned--their army deftroyed--and that the very name of the French Re all these physical advantages, he is indebte to his firibly feber mode of living, and the extreme fimplicity of his manners. In the country the plaineft cottage ferves him in-flead of a palace, and his bed is a bundle of ftraw. The most common aliments, without much cookery, are his conftant diet. Born of a diffinguisted family, and in the bolom of enjoyments, it is from moral prin-ciples, and to fit himfelf for the military prociples, and to fit himfell for the military pro-feffion, that he has habituated himfelf to that auflerity of manners which belong to Stoi-cilm, and that he has early banifhed from him all enjoyments, and luxury, and every kind of pleafure. Brought up amongft the din of arms, having paffed his whole life in the midft of battles, endowed with an ardent foul, a just mind, an enterprifing character, a generous heart, an elevated ge-nius, equally inacceffible to favour and to fear, he is firm in the refolution which he once takes, after convincing himfelf that it is the beft. In entering upon the career of arms, he cultivated his military tafte and talents, by a profound fludy, and ferious meditation, on the campaigns of the great-eft warriors, ancient and modern. No man retains fo lively a recollection of those fa-mous aad infructive events which have paffed in the different theatres of war. More philosophical than the greater part of War-riors, he has felt the difadvantages which riors, he has felt the dildvantages which automation, and confequently u empaffic ned troops muft experience, when oppofed to fuch as are animated by great fentiments, by exalted imaginations, and by prefligies proper to excite their ardour for the intereft of general and individual order. This it was which prejudiced him for much againft the Pruffian tactics; and thus he does not confus himfulf to thefe exercise only, which confine himfelf to those exercises only, which gives the activity to troops, but employs himfelf particularly on the fpirit of the ar-my. For this purpole he avails himfelf of all the means and refources which his genius can fupply, the knowledge of the charac-ters of individuals, their opinions, their mo-rals, their cuffoms, &c. Of this the following is a friking example.

Catharine II appointed him to the command of the 60.000 men which the was fending to the fuppert of the Emperor upon the Rhine, when the project was defeated by the death of the Princels. The Marshal immediately allembled round his head quar-ters the troops defined for that expedition. ters the troops defined for that expedition. The different regiments paffed fucceflively in parade every day. He re d to the foldiers those little inftructions drawn up by himfelf in a elear, fimple flyle, fitted to the minds of the Ruffian foldiery and the object of the projected expedition. They turned upon the duties of a foldier, and those things which, as a warrior, it was indify nible for him to know.—He there introduced facts, ance-dutes, maxime, well felected, and desteroufdores, maxims, well fe ected, and dexteroufy calculated to infpire them with the utmoft forror for the atrocious principles of the French Revolutionifts and an extreme aror to fight against them. He never let lip an opportunity of inculcating those fen-timents. When he exercised these troops, eithe in regiment or corps, it was the French Republican's they were taught they were to face; and they were the objects of all their attacks, all their manouvres, and against whom all their fhots were to be arms ed, and all their bayonets pointed. All this produced fo great an effect upon the army raverse a space of more than four hundred English miles in ten days, arrived under the walls of Warsaw, quickly reconnoitered the politions of the enemy, instantly formed his plan of attack, distributed his orders, and in a few moments the fate Warfaw was decided, the war terminated, &c. &c.

- To this inflance we might add, that of his having, with a handful of men, beaten and entirely routed the numerous army commanded by Price Oginfky, at the time of his firft confederacy, and that of his having com-pletely defeated, with 10,000 men, the army of the Grand Vizier. What gained him the great reputation he enjoys among the Au-frian troops and, an infinity of other actions more or lefs remarkable, is due to his genius and talents, which vulgar obfervers are pleafed to put to the accounts of chance.

The Court De Suwarrow palles for a fu-perflitions man-1fl, becaufe he posseffes nuch picty-2dly, because he avails him'elf of all their events, to which the vulgar attach fome preternatural idea, in order to excite confidence in the foldiers. A wolf, or other animal, which might canfe a fenfation in his army, by croffing it—a tree blown-down, or fruck with lightning, in fight of his troops any extraordinary appearances in the air, or in the heavens, which might give unealine's to his troops, are fo many circam-nances upon which he feizes with prompti-, tude and addrefs, for the purpole of drawing fome favourable augury. This pretended fuperflittion is one of the characterifics of great men. It was that of William the Conqueror, who, fitting down on his first landing in England, minediately fubstituted confi-dence for that terror, and with the circumflance infpired his army, by exclaiming-"It is to the pofferfion of this land that I now embrace and clafp it with both my arms"

LAW REPORT.

Court of King's Bench, April 18. Mr. Attorney General moved for the judg-ment of the Court on John Cuthell, Book-feller, in Middlerow, Holborn, who was con-victed before Lord Kenyon and a Special Ju-ry, at the Siteings after haft Term for Weft-minfter, of publiflung a Libel. Mr. Autorney General, on the part of the Crown, then flated the motives which had induced him to inflitute these profecutions igainst the Publishers as well as the Author of that publication. He also expressed an anxiety that a mild sentence should be pro-nounced on the Defendant, though he obferved it was unneceffary; for him to express that anxiety, as the Court never failed to take into their confideration every chrom-flance of mitigation, and to allow it its fullveight:

Lord Kenyon faid, the Court could not on he fudden weigh all the arguments that had been ufed." In the interim the Defendant must be committed to the King's Bench Pri-fon. They willed to bring him up to reaive the judgment of the Court the earlieft lay they could. It was impossible, as the day they could. It was impofible, as the Bulinets' of the Court was arranged, that could be earlier than next Wedneiday. Min Automey General next moved for the judgment of the Court on the Rev. Mr. G. Wakefield, who was convicted as the Author of the Libel entitled a Reply to the Bifhop of Landaff, on the fame day that Mr. Cut-hell was found guilty of publifhing it. After the Lord Chief Justice had reported the evidence given at the trial, Mr. Wakefield faid, he had no Counfel, and then read a speech upwards of an hour long in mitigation of ipwards of an hour long in mitigation of anifhment.

teir general made prifoner. It is well known that Suwarrow was defirous of following up those fucceffes by vigorous operations againft France, and com-pelled the king of Pruffia to re-enter into the General Confederacy. In the first blaze of the French Revolution, Suwarrow decla-red to the Empres, as well as to the foreign minifers at Petersbugh, that if he were placed at the head of 100,000 Ruffians, he would engage-with his head-to reftore the monarchy, or to lay all France in affect. It is by no means impossible that at that time he would have been able to effect what he promifed, but even now great expectations may be formed from the appearance of fuch a war-rior upon the field of action. The great danger to be apprehended is in the jealoufy of the Auffrian generals, who may fourn at be-ing placed under the command of a firanger, and the perfidy of the flaff officers, the grea-test part of whom are more than supposed to have been corrupted by the gold of Buonaparte.

At all events, the first action between the Ruffians and the French, is likely to be de-cifive of the fate of Italy. Should the lat-ter be defeated, there is little probability that a man of them will efcape. The Cof-facs who conftantly attend the Ruffian armies, and who are the more attached to Suwarrow, as from experience they have the ftrongeft confidence of his fuccefs, are a-mongft the ficrceft people on the globe.— They confif of hardy tribes of Tarters, whole cuftom is to rufh in upon a broken enemy, and who have no conception of any thing like quarter. They are extremely well mounted on ftrong and fwift horfes, bearing lances couched as in the days of an-cient chivalry, and drive with fuch impetuofi-ty, as with cafe to lift a huffar from his horfe. It, as with east to fit a hunar from his norie. It is however worthy of remark, that the delicious climate of Italy has always been found to invigorate rather than enervate the frames of those froity children of the North —a circumftance which calls to mind the exquifite fragment of our peet Gray, in def-cribing the incurfions of the Northern Couquerois into that charming country :

" With grim delight the hordes of ocean view. A brighter day and fkies of azure blue; Scent the lweet fragrance of the opening

" And quaff the pendant vintage as it. grows."

At the age of 65, of a body very thin, and a conflictution, in appearance, very fee-ble, Suwarrow neverthelefs is full of firength and activity, infentible to the inclemency of fealons, the variety of climates, and the fa-can, became, as it were mechanically, the fignal for battle ..

Convinced of the truth of that celebrated maxim-" Principles pro victoria pugnant comites pro Principe." Princes fight for glory, and foldiers for their Prince"-he particularly applied himfelf to gaining the affection of the troops; in which he perfectly fucceeded. He follows his army on horfe-back; and if he fees a foldier fatigued, he puts him on his horfe and marches, himfelf. on foot. He takes pleasure in sometimes eating out of a woden bowl; and if he finds there a fupper to his tafte, he manifefts his, fatisfaction by giving the fervant who at-tends, fome golden pieces, which are divided among the reft of the cooks, to drink the health of the General In his familiar conver-fation with his folders, the anecdotes which he relates with fimplicity, forve to animate, to give them a high opinion of themfelves; and to infpire them with great confidence in their leaders; and the confidence with which he has infpired them has been one of the caufes of that brilliant and uninterrupted feries of fuccefs which fignalized his military career. He has been in all the wars in which Ruffia has been engaged for thele forty years paft, and was engaged in more battles than any other warrior of the prefent day. In most of them he possessed the chief command and throughout, has never experienced any reverfe of fortune. It would be difficult to find in the annals of history, an example of a General who made fo many affaults, car-ried to many flrong and well-defended places, and gained fo many battles.

Some fuperficial people having remarked in Suwarrow, a certain originality of character, a fingularity of manners, much fimplicity in the form of difcourle, a great respect for religion, and for old opinions, cuffoms, and ufages, have difputed his rare qualities of military genius, and would attribute his constant successes to the mere effect of luck. Certainly conftant luck is a thing rather marvellous. Of that matter we may judge by the following trait.

Catharine II. weary of feeing the pro ration of the late war in Poland, ordered Marshall SUWARROW to enter that country at the head of 15,000 Ruffians, flationed on the Duiefter. He no fooner began his march than he was informed that the King of Pruffia had quitted the polifh territory with his army, in order to suppress fome growing in-furrections in his own frates. Thus reduced to his own troops only, he formed the defign of accelerating his march, and firiking fome fudden blow before the enemy could know the number of Ruffians, or the latter be acquainted with the obflacles they had to feasons, the variety of climates, and the fa-tigues of the rude occupation of war. For s nevertheless true, he made his little army

After a few words by way of reply from Mr. Attorney General, the Lord Chief Jus-tice faid, the Defendant must be committed to the King's Bench Prifon, and brought up on the first Thursday in the next Term (30th of May.)"
