CONTINUATION OF IMPORTANT Foreign Intelligence.

Supplement Extraordinary to the Vienna Court Gazette, June 26.

The General of cavalry Count Melas has sent hither Captain Torres, of the quarter staff, with the previous advice, that the hostile Gen Macdonald, after gaining the late advantage over the small corps of Gen. Count Hohenzollern, was advancing with a corps of about 35,000 men, by forced marches, from Modena against Piacenza, where Field Marshal Lieut. Ott had arrived shortly before with his weak division.

The disproportionate superiority of the enemy against the Field Marshal Lieut. induced the latter not to wait for a great attack, but to draw up behind the Tione, though continually fighting with the enemy's advanced guard, and to keep his out-posts beyond the Trebia.

In this position the General of cavalry, Melas, arrived on the 17th with a part of the Imperial royal army, and almost at the same time intelligence was received, that the enemy had attacked the chain of out-posts; it seemed to be the enemy's design to advance rapidly with one column on the caufeway of Castello St. Giovanni, but with the column of the right wing to make themselves masters along the Po, of the road conducting to Pavia.

Gen. Melas ordered the whole division of Field Marshal Lieut. Ott to halloo to support the out-posts; and farther increased the said division with two battalions of the regiment of Froelich. The sudden approach of Field Marshal Count Suwarow Rimmiskoy with the Imperial Russian advanced guard, and the courageous and resolute conduct of the division of Field Marshal Lieut. Ott, soon stopped the enemy's farther progress, and the latter, after several reiterated attacks beat off, were repulled with considerable loss, and forced, at the approach of night, to abandon to us the left bank of Tidone and the field of battle. In the night the remainder of the Imperial Russian troops arrived; and on the next day, the 18th inst. a fresh attack of the enemy was immediately resolved on.

The army was divided into three columns: the two first consisted of the Imperial Russian troops, and the third and strongest of the divisions of Ott and Froelich. The preparations for the attack required more time than was expected, and the onset was not made till five in the afternoon. The combat was obstinate and bloody, and only the courage and steadiness of the Imperial royal and Imperial Russian troops, as well as of their leaders, vanquished all difficulties; the enemy were repulled as far as the Trebia, and forced to leave us again masters of the field of battle.

Nevertheless, the enemy, by the movements among their Infantry on the right bank of the Trebia, seemed to intend a new attack for the 19th and our troops, who had now been four days without regular provisions, had no sooner cooked their food, than the enemy passed the river with upwards of 2000 cavalry, and with such impetuosity, that both their horse, and the most advanced detachments of their infantry had already gained the principal road towards St. Nicolo. Gen. Melas, collecting our cavalry, attacked the enemy with such resolute force, that they were in a short time driven back with very great loss, and vigorously pursued, both by our cavalry and infantry.

General Melas, observes that, at that moment, he could not describe the many distinguished actions of the troops and individuals on those three memorable days; but referred to himself to give a detailed relation hereafter. For, on the 20th an attack had already been planned on our part; but the enemy deterred by their late defeats, and incapacitated by their considerable loss to stand a new attack, retreated during night; and, at dawn, we only found their rear guard, which was retreating towards Piacenza, where the enemy left behind as prisoners, four wounded Generals, namely, the Generals of division Rusca and Salm; farther, the Generals of Brigade Olivir and Chambrat, with upwards of 2600 men in sick and wounded. In other quarters, upwards of 2000 more prisoners fell into our hands; and the field of battle covered with the enemies killed, shew the greatness of their loss.

Meanwhile our own loss, and that of the Imperial Russian troops, is not inconsiderable—respecting our own loss, the returns shall be sent in.

When the Courier came away such heaps of dead bodies covered the field of battle that it was then impossible to ascertain the number of killed: that of the enemy, however, is estimated at upwards of three thousand men. Our loss, too, is considerable, particularly in killed and wounded Officers.

General Kray has been sent off to harass the enemy in their retreat from Piacenza, and cut them off from Parma.

General Prince Lichtenstein had six horses killed under him.

The commandant of Mantua made a sortie with which his cavalry during these murderous actions, but was repulled with considerable loss.
