

Foreign Intelligence.

PARIS, September 6. COUNCIL OF FIVE HUNDRED.

After a short preface, Laborgue, in the name of the commission of marine made a report on the creation of an auxiliary navy.

Though the expedition to Egypt was disapproved of by political observers, some real advantages might be expected from it: but no precaution was taken by sea to protect it.

Privateering was a powerful means to revive our commerce, to distress that of the English, to force them to incur heavy expenses to convoy their merchant ships, and it experienced the greatest obstacles from the former Directory; the proprietors could not obtain letters of marque, and what is very remarkable, and proves the imbecility or the treachery of the ex-directors, embargoes were laid on our ports at the periods of the return of ships from both Indies.

The auxiliary navy is to be composed of armed merchant ships, to allow the seamen who serve in them to share in the honor of national rewards; to grant to their widows and children the same relief as to those of the seamen killed in the service of the national navy; to furnish the sea ordnance necessary; to give a premium of 24 francs per ton to every armed vessel which shall convey our manufactures to the colonies and bring to France the produce of our colonies; as well as to those which shall fetch naval stores from neutral and friendly ports.

The Council adopted some of the above articles and the rest were adjourned. In the Council of antients, Peres, of the department of the Upper-Garonne, returned thanks to the good genius of the Republic which had dispersed the bands of royalism, whose progress threatened to set every part of the Republic in a flame. But he could not dissemble, he said, that the enemies of the interior entertain hopes. The means he said to ensure the public safety were to enact laws on the liberty of the press and popular meetings, to confine them within their true limits, to excite the people to rise in a mass to combat the rebels of the west, after the honorable example of the Upper Garonne, to address a Manifesto to Europe, in which the republic shall express the sincerity of its intentions, and state the bounds which it will never pass.

The Council then sanctioned the resolution declaring that the administration and republicans of the Upper Garonne had deserved well of the country. The war minister has received a letter from general Fregeville, dated the 26th ult. containing the following details respecting the royal rebels: 1000 are in the prisons of Toulouse; 300 in those of Auch. The military commission, sitting at Perpignan, has been ordered to Toulouse: it will distinguish among the prisoners those who are guilty, from those who may be innocent or only militia. One of the most dangerous chiefs is the ci-devant Chevalier Terme, condemned to death about 18 months ago, who is wandering with his band, on the left borders of the Garonne. The general is going to make every exertion to seize him in one of his numerous retreats. The moveable columns of the Lot, and of the Lot and Go-ronne, have distinguished themselves in the pursuit of the rebels; 3500 republicans of the Tarn rose at the same instant, and gave an example of uncommon discipline, and the best conduct. The public voice does not cease to repeat that they were the deliverers of Toulouse, etc.

Thirty-seven French prisoners, who have been exchanged and are arrived at Cherbourg say, that the French prisoners are treated at present with more humanity in England.—They speak very high in particular of the attention paid them by captain Maderon of the prison ship the Portland, and captain Mackenzie, commanding the Prothee.

Telegraphs have been erected from Strasbourg to Mentz. General de Launay who was arrested at Toulouse as chief of the royalist insurgents, has been set at liberty, having given information, which tended materially to quell the insurrection.

Champlain has received orders to make another general attack, let what will be the consequence.

Just Published, A COMPENDIOUS SYSTEM Of Practical Surveying and dividing of land; briefly comprized under the following heads, viz. TWENTY-THREE Geometrical Definitions, eleven Geometrical Positions, exhibiting to view the properties and dependencies of triangles; followed by problems and examples preparatory to Trigonometry, heights and distances. Then fifteen problems and examples necessarily previous to calculating a Survey succeeded by seven surveys, the area of the four first is found geometrically, and of the whole number by difference of latitude and departure, shewing how to take an inaccessible boundary, find the bearing and distance of the closing line without running it, also the distances to an inaccessible corner from the two adjacent corners, followed by examples of offsets on to winding streams of water, shewing how to ascertain the area without the trouble of measuring the windings with chains and instruments—a crooked water course fringed, and a quantity of land on each side found by these offices.

Ten examples of dividing land, with many sub-divisions, leading into the most critical circumstances that can occur in practice; an example of Intersections, and an example shewing how the bearings of a field may be truly taken where the needle is attracted, altho' the attraction may vary in quantity and denomination at every station; examples shewing the method of measuring by the chain only.
