

WILLIAM COBBETT,
OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK,
Has in the press and will soon publish,
FOR
LIFE AND CAMPAIGNS
OF
PRINCE SUWARROW, WITH
A most elegant
PORTRAIT
OF THAT RENOWNED WARRIOR.

The first edition of this work was published in London about four months ago, and such was the curiosity and admiration it attracted, that it passed through several editions in the space of one month. It is comprised in one thick octavo volume, which the re-publisher will endeavor to make equal in elegance and correctness to the best of the London editions.

The Portrait is in the hands of one of the first Artists (if not the very first) in America.

MEDALS.

There is nothing in which the superlative vanity of the French has been more conspicuous and disgusting than the article of Medals. The age of Louis the XIV. abounded in them; that of his successor, being more peaceable, produced fewer. The age of Louis XVI. (himself a mild, benevolent prince) was a series of political crimes, blunders, and misfortunes. The American revolution, which was promoted by his profligate court, was but the forerunner of others infinitely more destructive. On that occasion was struck one of the most curious Medals that modern times have witnessed; which, as a singular memorial of the political birthday of the United States, should be more generally known to their citizens.

On the face of this Medal is the Bust of a beautiful maiden, with her tresses floating in the wind, such perhaps as they appear on some of the American coins, though of superior execution. The head is surmounted by a liberty cap, suspended at the end of the vindicta, or rod, used by the Roman magistrate on enfranchising a slave:
"Hæc mera libertas; hæc nobis piles donant."

LIBERTAS AMERICANA.
4 JUL. 1776.
The reverse exhibits France attired like Minerva, presenting her shield, with the gallic lilies in the field, to an affrighted leopard, under which emblem Britain is insultingly typified, while, with the right hand, she is prepared to bury her spear in his side.—Below this vaunting figure is a young Hercules, strangling the serpents that had assailed his infancy.
Legend.
Non sine Diis aemulos infans.
17 Oct. 1777
19 1781.

In this medalic galconade the Citizens of America may read the origin of their boasted liberty. Look at the dates, and then recollect that, until you were enfranchised by the brave and generous French nation, you were miserable slaves. It was the treaties of 1777 and 1781 that made you free, and not your own spirit or prowess. So said the monarchists of France, and so likewise say the republicans; the latter, indeed, add that as they made you free, so they can unmake you, when they please—and, God forgive my want of faith, I am afraid they will some day realize their boasting.

But this Medal was not intended merely to remind the Americans of their obligations; it was designed also to insult their ancient enemies the British. Behold perfidious France, whether governed by one tyrant, or by five, as your inveterate and implacable foe, and, if a just Providence blefs your arms with success, "BRITONS, STRIKE HOME."
But I can see no propriety whatever in the lower figures. There is no analogy between the serpents and Great Britain, and quite as little between Hercules and the United States: perhaps Mercury with his caduceus would be a more just and expressive emblem. The brave Ion of Jupiter and Alcmena was the founder of the noble order of chivalry; he spent his life in clearing the world of monsters, and, if he were now living, would certainly shoulder his club and join the coalition: This part of the Medal is therefore inapplicable, either as a memorial of past events, or as an emblem of existing character; but with a small variation, by supposing that the serpents are strangling young Hercules, instead of he strangling them, it would be no bad type of French intrigue, which attacked the infant Commonwealth in its cradle, and will, I am afraid, attend it to its grave.

Poor Louis! when he was thus exulting in the success of his intrigues against a neighbouring prince, little did he think that this LIBERTAS AMERICANA would soon destroy him and his family, his religion, and his country. Should Louis XVIII. recover the throne of his ancestors (for which he is by no means qualified) it will not be improper, in order to express his gratitude, as well as to commemorate the glorious event, to have another Medal executed to match the foregoing; and to let them both be preserved, among the most precious jewels of his cabinet, as an awful lesson to all succeeding heirs of the Gallic sceptre.

On the front of this Medal I would have a representation of the goddess of liberty (with the head of Medusa) trampling on the lifeless body of Louis XVI. and carrying his head, stuck on the end of a pike, round the stage of a guillotine; and below, a fanful lotes, with a Voltaire in one hand, and an axe in the other, hacking to pieces a pulp and an altar.

* According to ancient Mythology Mercury was the common News-man of Olympus, he presided over the speculations of commerce, and he was Jupiter's negotiator general—and where could he find more employment in all these articles than in the United States of America? It is true, there was something a little tricky in his character, he once outwitted Apollo himself, but that we have nothing to do with.

PROVIDENCE (R. I.) January 1.
Arrived at Newport the ship Hope, from Batavia. Sailed from thence the last of August. Francis Malbone, Esq. who went out supercargo, has returned in good health. The ship Russell, of Newport, mounting 12 guns, was captured within about 50 miles of Batavia, while at anchor, by a French picaaron of two guns and 25 men; being the same vessel which took the Aurora, of Philadelphia. While the men of the Russell were engaged in handing the sails, the privateer, apparently coming to anchor, dropped along side, and made prize of the ship!

FIRE BUCKETS.
The great inattention shewn by a number of Citizens, by suffering their Fire Buckets to remain for days and sometimes for weeks in the streets and alleys, adjacent to where they have been used at fires, has induced the Mayor to direct the High Constable, at the expiration of four days from the time that a fire shall happen in the City, to have collected and removed to the City Hall, the fire Buckets which he may find in the Streets after that period. The owner will thereby have an opportunity of recovering their Buckets, which perhaps, otherwise would have been lost by their neglect. A number is now at the City Hall.
