The final downfall of the Regicidal Rewhen those men, who relying on the inculcations of plain fenfe and natural reafon, looked up to with certitude and patiently would have prepared for this event, may exultingly reproach the disciples of doubt, the nfatuated peace-makers, and the dreaming vifionaries of probability, with all those difafters which a want of faith has incurred. But the day of triumph is not a fit feafon for reproach ; and those weak and miserable men may be properly left to deplore in filent defpair their obduracy to those admonitions which would have retrieved the errors they had perpetrated.

With the return of its lawfel and only natural government to France, all those diftempered and incoherent phantafirs of liber. ty, equality, and perfectibility, univerfal republicanism, and universal domination, difappear, like the retiring mills of a morning in Spring before the orient fun. The order and the happiness of the Universe again sublift in their accustomed admirable. harmony, and innovators and their innova tions vanish into the shadowy chaos whence they emerged to curfe and fcourge mankind.

Since these things are fo, I would fug-gest to the editor the expediency of turn-ing to the 312th page of the sirst volume of Hume's history of England, and blotting out this featence, in which, speaking of the reduction of Jerufalem by the christians, in the year 1100, he fays, "This great event happened on the fifth of July in the last THE Subferibers to this Gazette are inform-ed, that the Parencell Number is thus day received at the Phiadelphia Poil Office. I THINK the following melancholy end of an unknown, well-bred lady, is worth inferting in your papers, for the informa-tion of her unfortunate parents, hufband or friends.

There came a lady in a carriage (but not her own) to Black-fwamp, to the house of Mr. William Lawton, far advanced in preg-nancy, and was delivered the fame night-In a week or two after, the child died, and fhe removed to a near neighbour of Mr. Lawton, where the was taken very ill, with a fever & ague, and there died on the first day of this month. She was handfome and genteel, very polite, and faid fhe had a great education ; that her father was a wealthy gentleman; that fhe had married against the confent of her parents, to a merchant, who fince had broke, and had failed fince in a thip as mate ; but the never mentioned, either the fhip's name, or whereunto bound. She called herfelf Lucy Gration, and faid that her father lived near Georgetown. She had a great quantity of very good cloathing ; and it is faid, fhe had, and has left a fum of money. She faid the wanted to go to Augusta; but, there is no certainty from whence the came, nor whether the told her real name.

Please to infert the above in your papers for humanity fake, that her friends may known of the melancholy event; and oblige, gentlemen. Yours, &c.
