PORCUPINE To the Public.

WHEN I determined to discontinue the publication of Porcupine's Gazette, I intenled to remain for the future, if not an unconcerned, at least, a filent spectator of pub-lic transactions and political events; but, the unexpected and fweeping refute of a law fuit, fince decided against me, has induced me to abandon my lounging intention. The fuit to which I allude, was an action of flander, commenced against me in the autumn of 1797. by Doctor Benjamin Rufh, the noted bleeding physician of Philadelphia. It was tried on the 14th of December last, when "the upright, enlightened and impar-tial Republican Jury" affessed, as damages, five thousand dollars; a sum surpassing the aggregate amount of all the damages, affest ed for all the torts of this kind, ever fued for in these States, from their first settlement to the prefent day. To the five thou-fand dollars, must be added the costs of suit, the lofs incurred by the interruption in colecting debts in Pennsylvania, and by the facrifice of property taken in execution, and fold by the facriff at public auction in Phifladelphia, where a great number of books in fleets (among which was a part of the new edition of Porcupine's Works) were fold, or rather given away, as waste paper; so that, the total of what has been, and will be, wrested from me by Rush, will fall little

To favor I do not feel this stroke, and very tenably too, would be great affectaven tenubly too, would be great anecta-tion; but, to repine at it would be folly, and to fink under it would be cowardice. I knew an Englishman in the Royal Province of New Brunswick, who had a very valuable house, which, was, I believe, at that time, nearly his all, burnt to the ground. He was out of town when the fire broke out, and happened to come just after it had exhauhe had carned the property, expected to fee him bitterly bewail its lois. He came very leiturely up to the spot, steed about five minutes, looking carnefly at the rubbit steel, itripping then, itripping the model of the spot and introduced the sp ately went to work, raking the fpikes and bits of iron out of the ashes. This noble spirited man I have the honor to call my friend, and if ever this page should meet his eye, he will have the farisfaction to fee, that, thould it be impossible for me to follow, I, at least remember his example.

In the future exercions of my industry, however, pecuniary emolument will be, as it this, and the fooner I begin the fooner I shall

On Monday, the 24th inflant, therefore I shall publish the first number of a periodica work, which, as it is intended to affelt the public view in the inspeding of various tenebrous objects, will be called, and not, I prefume, improperly, a Light; and, as the appearance of this light must be attributed wholly to the Philadelphian phlebotomist. gratitude will fanction the propriety of fixthe great literary luminaries of this enlightened nation emit their effulgence through vehicles which they most fignificantly term the Aurora, the Star, the Constellation, the Comet, or the Sun, I am content that my glimmering efforts should steal forth under the appellation of the Rush-Light.

I must, nevertheless, do myself the justice to assure the public, that, with the Rush-Light in his hand, any one (if the poor soul be not stone blind) will be able to see a good many very pretty things, which not-withflanding the folendor of the grand lu-minaries above-mentioned, would, without the aid of my little taper, remain hidden from him all the days of his life.

To fay what will be the subject of the Rush-Light, would, at this time be imporlible, and were it possible it would be useles, It may not, however, be amifs to observe, that as Rush is, in some fort the father of the work, a preference will certainly be given to him and his cause. These will, indeed, occupy a considerable portion of the three first numbers; and as the matter is already prepared for the press, these numbers will follow each other as speedily as may te. Of the fucceeding numbers one will be published on the 15th, and one on the last day

The Rush-Light, notwithstanding the example of the patriot to whom it owes its cond furname, will never lay it down as a maxim, timore.

Each number will contain 48 octavo pacs, never less, and sometimes more, and will be enveloped in a blue wrapper, in the nagazine flyle. The printing will be excured by Melfrs. G. and R. Waite of New-

York, upon excellent paper, and the best type in America.

The price of each number will be a quarter of a dollar. To booksellers at a distance the following are the terms of sale: He who pays cash for twelve copes will be allowed three over; twenty-sive copies, eight over; fifty copies, twenty over; one hundred co-pies, fifty over; and the like in proportion for any intermediate number; but none will, on any account, be fent out of New York, till the cash is received. To gentlemen who wish to have fingle numbers sent on to them by poll, the following information may be useful. The pollage of a fingle number for any diffance not exceeding 50 miles, will be three cents; for any greater distance not exceeding 100 miles, 4 and one half cents; for any distance above 100 miles, fix cents.
