[From the Phila. Sat. Courier. Thoughts, suggested by the Sea-

Where are the sun-bright golden hours? Full swiftly they have flown; The leafy drapery of the bowers, The song of birds, the fragrant flowers, All, all alas! are gone.

The music of the woodland rills, Late echoing on the air, Is hushed in gloom; the verdant hills, Where summer's genial dew distils, With frost are white and bare.

The towering trees which lately spread Protecting shadows wide; Deserted lift the hoary head, Their glorious summer robes all fled And gone their regal pride.

Wan nature wears a saddened face, O'er treasure lost she mourns; But cometh Spring's bright form apace, Radiant with health and blooming grace, When each prized gift returns.
