The first thing the Representatives should do, says the Boston Atlas, when they meet in Washington, in December, is to demand of the President what he intends to accomplish by a farther presecution of the war. He should be required to give an explicit and categorical answer to this inquiry, and, until an answer is obtained, the Whigs should refrain from voting new appropriations of money or new levies of men for the corner of Third and Dock Streets, opposite Mer-chants' Exchange, or 440 North Fourth street, and the object should be known. When it is known, then the Whigs will understand precisely their position, and will act accordingly. In his message, last December, Mr. Polk said, "the object of the war was not one of conquest;" having therefore, told us what the war was not for, let him in December tell what it is for. If it is not for conquest, what ob- |85. ject has it! It it has no object, or if it is for conquest, the sooner it is stopped the better. We take it that the people of this country have no desire to continue a war which yearly costs thousands of lives and millions of money, merely for the gratification of a personal spite, or for an equally unworthy purpose, fighting for the love of it.

ADDITIONAL MEXICAN INTELLI-GENCE.

The additional intelligence received from Mexico last evening presents a more intelligible and connected view of events than the previous accounts. The causes which led to the armistice, and by what parties suggested, leave no ground for apprehension that Gen. Scott was induced to propose a suspension of arms from necessity, on account of the smallness of his force, reduced by two sanguinary engagements. The agency of the British Legation in the matter, while it thus clears up mond Whig concludes an article upon the this doubtful part of the transaction, fursubject of the Wilmot Proviso, and the nishes increased assurance of a pacific re-
