Have we the right to expect these troops to be better than white ones? If raw white troops had been thus demoralized, would we have blamed them under the circumstances? Having eliminated some errors in regard to the attack on Petersburg, let us now consider the main question, Whether our want of success can be properly called disastrous? The whole of the military operations must be taken into account, for they were all concerted with the view of capturing the town.

They may be briefly summed up as follows:—General HANCOCK defeated the enemy at Deep Bottom and Malvern Hill. We blew up a fort in Petersburg and assaulted the position of the enemy, who, assaulted, in turn, and was several times repulsed, the loss of men on both sides being about equal—the highest estimate of ours being three thousand in killed, wounded, and missing. The balance of success is with us; for we won the engagements at Deep Bottom and Malvern Hill, and destroyed an important salient of the enemy's works at Petersburg. Against these advantages the only thing which the enemy can place is a knowledge of one plan of attack.

There is something, however, still remaining to be considered. We in the North are too prone to regard the movements of the army near Richmond as the only military affairs worthy of attention. It is true, that the taking of Richmond will definitely relieve Washington from all danger; and that, as capitals influence strategy, the capture of Richmond is therefore of twofold importance. Yet, is not Atlanta also strategically important? Has General SHERMAN been doing nothing for the last three weeks? Why, he has repulsed the enemy in three battles. Repulses more disastrous have not been witnessed even in this war. Taking General THOMAS's account of the actual number of the enemy known to have been killed on the 20th and 23rd of July, and adding to them the usual proportion of wounded, and the prisoners captured, and including the number given in the latest news about the battle of the 28th, we find that while the Union loss for the three days amounted to somewhat less than six thousand in killed, wounded, and missing, that of the enemy was thirty thousand seven hundred and eighty-two. This, of course, does not cover the entire loss of the enemy, because he must have carried off some of his dead and wounded, and because the returns from General THOMAS's lines were not complete.

What do we desire? What more could we have? Uninterrupted success? No Power ever yet obtained it. It is the balance of warlike strength which preponderates. Let us not be forgetful of the deeds of our brave countrymen, and above all, let us not be ungrateful to God, who has lavished victory in answer to the prayer of our people.

NEGLECTING THE INFANTS. We have a great many colleges, and many more schools, private and public, and we brag a great deal about what we call universal education in America; but is not this one of the numerous agreeable delusions with which we amuse ourselves? In proportion to population, perhaps there are more boys and girls in the United States who can, vulgarly speaking, read and write, and perhaps cipher a little, than in most other countries; but with that exception, who would pretend to boast of our educational system as respects its practical efficiency and results?

Take the mass of the young men who are graduated yearly at our leading colleges, and what is the average of their actual acquirements? Out of a class of fifty or sixty who are given their degree of Master of Arts, how many are really masters of any one branch of study? Occasionally we may meet with a scholar who deserves his diploma. Yet for one such, there are a hundred or a thousand who, without substantial acquisitions would disgrace a freshman in any first-rate British university. With a miserable smattering of knowledge in all the branches of a regular course, they are positively proficient in none; and it is a fact, quite as notorious as it is discreditable, that they get through in the end by a system of cramming and imposture which is practised in our most respectable institutions with a degree of facility and success that would seem to imply connivance on the part of professors and trustees.

In our public schools we doubt if the plan of instruction and the results attained are much, if any better. Examine the majority of graduates in both cases, and what do you know? They may answer you glibly enough some few questions in this or that branch of science. One may furnish a tolerable version of a line of HORACE, another demonstrate a problem in EUCLID, a third explain the philosophy of boiling water, and the like; but are there ten or five in a hundred who can be said in any single line of study to have achieved accomplished scholarship?

We do not, however, mean to speak of deficiencies in classical learning, nor in physical and metaphysical science. There is a yet graver and more disgraceful fault in our American youth are not taught English; that not one in a hundred who leave college or a high school, with the usual testimonial of scholastic attainments, can read, or spell, or write his mother tongue decently. It is possible that he may discourse very fluently about Greek and Roman mythology, or cubes and square roots, or dynamics and hydrostatics, and all that sort of thing; but we undertake to say, that if he be required to prepare a paragraph of a dozen or more lines for a newspaper, he will commit some shameful blunder in the orthography or the grammar of it. Let any one refer to his private correspondence, and see how far we are borne out in this charge.

It is not the rarest thing to see Americans writing their own language, not with elegance, force, and fluency, but with propriety? How many can speak it correctly, or even read it with becoming grace and effect? Publish without amendment the serious dissertations of men who are reputed scholars, and what sad demolition you would make of their literary character! Print, just as it is pronounced, the deliberate speech of many a lawyer or statesman among us, and see what a marvellous havoc he makes of the ordinary rules of syntax and prosody! Ask any one of a casual company of clever men to read a passage from any English classic, in prose or verse, and mark the elocution. The chances are that it will be sung through the nose with a monotonous whine, or mumbled as some moon-struck player would pronounce it, in utter disregard of all proprieties of accent or pauses, or delivered with a sameness of manner wholly unappreciative and unimpressive.

The reason of this is obvious. Neither English grammar nor rhetoric are taught and learned in our schools. The rules of both may be got by rote, but the philosophy of neither is ever thoroughly comprehended or applied. Reform in this is certainly needed, and may be very easily introduced. Let our young men be proficients in English scholars at least. Let them be able to read, write, and speak their own tongue correctly, and even grasp fully, however deficient they may be in the dead languages. The latter need not be neglected, but a mastery acquisition of the former should be the primary aim and fundamental condition of American scholarship. It is not so regarded now, and the fact is apparent enough in every day's familiar social intercourse. Indeed, to hear us talk and see us write, a board of competent English critics would pronounce us, in the main, a nation of blockheads.

A local contemporary says:— "War has slain his thousands—cholera infection carries off its little victims by tens of thousands. The total deaths of this city last week were 134, which is just 43 more than in the week before, and 27 more in the corresponding week of last year. Cholera has killed fifty-six children were translated last week to the better world. Two hundred and fifty-five were followed by sorrowing parents to the graveyard. Two hundred and fifty-five lights of home were extinguished, mainly by cholera infantum, dysentery, diarrhea, and convulsions, peculiar to children.

A New York exchange makes the following report:— "The mortality list for the past week is rather formidable. Deaths from all diseases, 559. Of these, 345 were children under ten years of age. Increase over last week, 17. Cholera infantum had 93 victims; consumption, 55; scarlet fever, 16; killed by accidents, 9; drowned, 10."

It will be found difficult to controvert the fact that, of the immense mortality among children which every summer brings, the major portion might be averted, if less culpable carelessness and a higher degree of acquaintance with the duties and responsibilities of maternity were prevalent among mothers. The second summer is the period in human life which is most thickly beset with perils of disease and helplessness, when, as a general rule, the infant is deprived of its mother's nourishment, and supplied for the first time with artificial diet; when its little limbs first learn their uses, and when they require the most scrupulous and untiring attention.

And yet when we look about us in our daily walk and observation, can we resist the conviction that the pitiable ignorance of many mothers, and the criminal negligence of others, deprive each year thousands of children of the breath of life, with as much certainty as though the act were committed with deliberate intent, and indictable as an instance of infanticide? Wherever we bend our steps we find poor, puny, and neglected ones, entrusted to the tender mercies of nurses, who are no other than their pitiless lookers, and alternately starve or starve them without the remotest thought for the direful consequences.

We find women in whom all the maternal affections are blunted—whose love of gay society and visiting has vanquished all natural care for their offspring; and, after a time, the lacerated craps and ribbon pendant over their lintels, the little coffin and the dismal hearse standing before their doors, proclaim, in conscience-quickening significance, the result of most cruel and inhuman neglect, which, although not an offense before an earthly tribunal, stands upon the books of the recording angel as murder.

Perhaps, however, the most numerous and distressing cases occur through the utter ignorance of mothers in the care of their children. We often find them, after a protracted period of ministering to the appetite of infants that which, instead of being their natural nourishment, becomes an active and pain-producing poison. The same malignant effect is produced from the use, by the parent, of unwholesome or unwholesome food, or of violent or insufficient exercise. But the most harrowing picture in connection with the subject is presented in the crowded and pent-up dwellings of the poor in our large cities, many of whom are born, exist, and die without ever knowing exemption from impurity of all kinds, moral and material, and whose children, to fearful extent, populate our numerous cemeteries.

Here, again, is infanticide committed to an extent horrible to contemplate, and to arrest it is as impossible as to check profanity or inferior grades of vice. Still, there is another class of poor among whom infant mortality is large, but inevitable—people who, through poverty or contracted circumstances, are precluded from procuring the necessary comforts for their little ones, and who follow them to their last homes with the full consciousness that a single week of country air and rural scenery would have snatched them even from the yawning gulf of the grave. The sorrows of such are sacred, and the sufferers can only console themselves by faith in the great Comforter, who doeth all things well.

OLD CLASSES.—It is a remarkable fact that the cost of the Atlanta brought together three old class-mates from West Point. General McClellan, General Sherman, and General Bragg. General Sherman were old "class," being room-mates during the last year of their cadetship in the United States Military Academy, West Point, yet one fell by the hands of the other.

—An old lady, seventy-eight years of age living in Schuylker county, Illinois, gave birth to twins, two girls, a short time since. Mother and daughters doing well.
