WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 17, 1864.

THE WAR NEWS.

The movement just begun by the Army of the Potomac, and which seems to promise such important results, is one of the expedients for obtaining advantage over the enemy for which the Lieutenant-General is so justly famous.

NEIGHBORS.

In a great city there is little exhibition of that neighborly friendship and intimacy so observable in small towns. A new arrival in the midst of a village circle at once becomes the topic for all gossip, and a minute analysis of the qualities of the stranger is the special prerogative of the rural Grubies.

THE PEACE QUESTION.

There is a very extraordinary peace fever springing up in New York. The Herald and another daily paper in the same latitude have taken the disease in a violent form, and are exhibiting it in the ravings of a monomaniacal delirium.

MUSICAL NOTICES.

Offenbach has successfully produced at Esau a new opera, called 'Le Soldat Magique.' Madame Lagura has gone to Naples to fulfill a professional engagement.

The Washington authorities, the valuable prestige of having received and refused offers of pacification, but the additional advantage of an uninterrupted interval in which to greatly fortify itself in every respect to renew the temporarily suspended conflict of arms.

Such counsellors are surely not worthy of serious consideration. The President has already declared the three essential conditions on which the rebellious States will be received again into the Union, the chief of which is the abandonment of slavery; and it would be undignified as well as idle to seek now to open a conference with the Rebels with a view to a peace on any less exacting terms.

In view, then, of such facts, what would be the virtue and what is the necessity of doing more than the President has already done? The door to peace stands wide open to the man who has been waging a force and unattainable war against the National Government; and if they do not enter it, theirs is the fault, and theirs should also be the responsibility.

Adeline Patti has lately sung at the Crystal Palace, before an audience of thousands of people. The Federal artists from the Grand Opera House, and some of the attractions of this concert.

An organ has been recently built in a Roman Catholic chapel at Roncevaux, which contains several very good instruments, such as the Dulcet, Harmonic Flute, the Lieblich Bourdon, the Rohr Flute, and the Spire Flute. They are all of the best quality.

Madame Grisi has also made a notable success in London as 'Margaret' in Faust, although she took the part without having had a single rehearsal. The fifth 'Margaret' who has appeared in London, and who has been seen at Covent Garden, Tivoli, Lucca, and Adeline Patti.
