THE MILITARY NEWS.

The additional reports received from the river do not materially change the report of engagement of Sunday near Deep Ford. On Sunday night our forces held all the land that had been gained during the day, on Monday our lines—what portion of them that were advanced at one point to a position within six miles of Richmond. The 2d of Sunday, however, was not achieved.

COLONEL JAQUES' MISSION.

In the Atlantic Monthly for September, and Down in Tennessee, a new volume about to be published, Mr. J. R. Gilmore ("Edmund Burke") gives an account of the recent visit made by Colonel Jaques and himself to Richmond, South where there has been so much speculation.

While on a visit to the Army of the Cumberland, in May, 1863, General Rosecrans banded a letter to Mr. Gilmore, from a subordinate officer, asking for a furlough, with a request that Mr. Gilmore would see him, and if the plan he proposed seemed feasible, the General would sign the furlough.

He believed, if permission were given him to visit his wife and children, that he could be of great service to the Government. He believed, if permission were given him to visit his wife and children, that he could be of great service to the Government.
