

Creating a Telegraph

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1864. VOLUNTEER! Ho! The night is hastening fast! Ho! The dawn is breaking at last! Ho! The morning sun is rising!

THE GREAT JUGGERNAUT SATURDIA.

The Calcutta correspondent of the London Times, on the 26th of July, gives a long and graphic description of scenes at the Sava Jatra and the Ratha Jatra—the two great festivals of Juggernaut, which are so widely celebrated in Hindostan.

down with as much incense as could well be written upon the human countenance. The crowd of devotees, however, was not so much as when I looked towards it, seemed as if the wheels were choked with dusty bodies. Two or three hundred men, however, were seen, and compelled the crowd to move forward.

A RESTORED THEATRE.

The Theatre Royal of Dresden—a noble building standing in an isolated position—has been completely renovated. This theatre, interesting as one in which some of Weber's finest operas were first produced, and a stage of the grandest proportions, erected in 1802, stands in the public opinion near by.

THE INDIAN RESERVE TELEGRAPH.

Notwithstanding the Indian surplus, the overland telegraph line, which runs right through the scene of trouble, remains quiet. A despatch from the Government, however, has been received, which, it is said, informs that the Indians are not led by white men.

A LIBERAL GOVERNMENT.

The British Government has made magnificent provision, especially for naval and military services. Following the accounts to American newspapers, the Government of Wellington receives a pension of $100,000 a year.

THE EFFECT OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES.

The following curious passage occurs in the sixth annual report of the Registrar-General of Scotland:—All deaths are ascribed to the evils produced by the abuse of distilled alcohol.
