

Evening Telegraph A DAILY AFTERNOON NEWSPAPER. OFFICE NO. 108 S. THIRD STREET.

Why, then, in prospect of such a result, should the people wish to change the Federal Administration? The shortest and surest way to a final and satisfactory settlement of the trouble lies through the very path of resolute and uncompromising war which this present Executive is so successfully prosecuting.

Gold has not fallen in value, but the price of it in "greenbacks" has. In other words, the national currency has rapidly and greatly risen in public appreciation, while all commodities of commerce have depreciated in price accordingly.

General SHERIDAN continues in pursuit of EARLY down the valley of Virginia. It is evident that the Rebel leader cannot halt this side of Lynchburg. This will give SHERIDAN possession of Gordonsville, Charlottesville, and Staunton—all of which towns are important posts, and are well fortified.

With peace on the basis of restored Union, every one can perceive that universal prosperity must be revived, and that the vast productive power of the nation, applied in the development of its boundless material wealth, must be equal to a speedy liquidation of the national debt, and the reduction of taxation in the proportion that the necessity to provide for an extraordinary revenue is removed.

Peace, we believe, is near at hand; and if the efforts that are now making to achieve it are not interrupted and put back by any violent political changes in the supreme direction of our political affairs, we are persuaded that the Union of the States will be reconstructed on a firmer basis than ever, and the country started on a career of progress and felicity unprecedented in human annals.

Not all the faces we gaze upon are sad, careworn, pale, and nervous. Not all the forms we encounter are bent and tremulous, like the sapling in a gale. We come across a considerable number of individuals who look as if they were not in the slightest degree affected by the subsidence of stocks and the financial earthquake which is shaking the body-business to its centre.

Jokes fly from their tongues like sparks from an anvil; they snap their fingers sharply; whistle lively and cheerful melodies; throw themselves into attitudes expressive of great exhilaration and playfulness; and insert their digits in the ribs of those in their vicinity with rare jollity.

In the meantime they are smoking high-flavored cigars, partaking of mid-day lunches and delicate beverages, filling their places at the opera, theatre, or concert, driving their fast trotters before their light elastic wagons, kicking up the dust, and having a good time generally on the old scale.

These are mature people. The children are as bright and happy as if money was a drug, and only to be given away. They romp furiously—catching at the straws and butterflies which in their innocence they regard as the greatest things on earth, and well worth living for. Their little frolics are not subdued at all. Their little faces are not engraved with the characters of calamity and apprehension.

Young men prepared for the coming home and business life. Through and practical instruction in all its branches, as required by the laws, accounts, and business men.

DOINGS OF THE DRAMA. EDWIN ADAMS has so often played "Robert Landry," that it seems unnecessary to recall his various exhibitions to a public which has long remembered them.
