RESOLUTIONS CAMPAIGN: THE ARMY OF HOOD AND SHERMAN.

We have never during the course of the war had anything analogous to the military situation as it is at present in the Southwest. The two great armies which so long confronted one another, and which fought each other from Nashville to Atlanta, have parted company, and each has started off in a direction opposite to the other.

Since November 1, 1863, twenty thousand prisoners of war have been transferred from the military prison at Fort Mifflin, Pennsylvania, to the military prison at Fort Mifflin, Pennsylvania.

From Sherman's army in Georgia the military situation is later, but the Rebel force there is still in the hands of Sherman's army.

The Rebel army at Richmond is beginning to feel the effects of the blockade, and the situation is becoming more and more desperate.

which these supplies are drawn, and out of all which will leave not a single line of railway communication between Richmond and the James river, and that of Hood on the Tennessee.

Hence the panic and consternation which prevail at Richmond. Besides the cries from that doomed city to the people of Georgia to destroy their own existence in order to starve out Sherman, there is their loud cry for aid.
