

EVENING TELEGRAPH

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1864.

BYING AUTUMN.

Blustering winds are careless mourning. Along the red and yellow trees— Once the golden sea of corn. Weaving in the balmy breeze...

THE CHINESE IN SAN FRANCISCO.

DESCRIPTION OF ONE OF THEIR TEMPLES—AN EARLY MIXTURE OF BUSINESS AND SUPERSTITION—JOSH IN HIS SANCTUARY, ETC.

It may not be known to our readers that there are in California six influential and wealthy Chinese companies, which are partly commercial and partly benevolent organizations...

They are not unlike in their characters and objects these great commercial and religious companies that sprang up in Europe after the discovery of America...

The Ning Yung Company, which is the largest and wealthiest, recently built a large establishment on Dupont alley, between Pacific street and Broadway...

Blowing from his mouth upon the furniture and into the corners of the room; and the queer proceeding of burning incense, burning of incense, burnings before Josh, visiting and feasting...

Blowing in the fan, blowing up, one sets that the front of the main altar is hung with long gilt wafers, inscribed with red and black letters—four letters on each side...

ent (small images, peaked yellow flag, pyramid of five-shaped bunches of artificial flowers, peacock tails, and insects, interspersed inlaid ornaments, a hanging lamp, carved with gilt figures...

In the rear of all this splendor stands the altar of Josh, the wooden god of the amoned-eyed idolaters. This is a square of carved and gilded wood, about one hundred feet high and eight feet wide...

In proof of this story we were shown by Ah Wai, in a manner that admitted of no contradiction, wooden idols, high as a giant and as wide as an exact representation of the one that Josh swung with such facile fury... organ was from O'Connell Co. in C. in 1815; but no doubt the C. G. G. The number of pipes was 1720. The organ was brought to Philadelphia in 1820...

It occupied the heights of the Terebentia, and occupied the floor of the old city. In 1855 he commanded the left wing of the Pennsylvania army at the battle of Gettysburg...

It was not until 1855 that the organ was removed from its old position and placed in its present position on the south side of the City Hall...
